Recall the last time we used it.

Even after unleashing FOFA, we were able to direct Chiaki's fury despite the combat haze.

Assuming no one goes near chiaki during the combat, we should end up with chiaki coming out of a stupor with her having chopped up lucius' corpse into a fine mince. That was what midori stopped her from doing after all.

Whats more that was before the operation. Chiaki's control over it should be even better, now.

I don't think it's going to be that easy. I think we are going to have to brawl with her a bit, the sword is just going to fall from the sky like an air drop. Then we time stop to grab the thing. Beyond that, who knows.

Unfortunately we have to put up a bit of a show here, we can't just gib someone in the middle of the concert. There is no way it would go over well.

Plus that would require us getting the sword within the next 10 mins, and I don't think that is going to happen.

When all is said and done, we turn to the crowd, curtsy, then timestop out. They would eat that shit right up. Provided we still maintain the capacity to walk after the fight.

On the note of choice of weapons, lets use the bracelets for now, maybe once we're out on the field Yuu could detect Wendy much more clearly. But have the sword ready to go in our shield if need be.

I understand this sentiment, I myself have voted for going out on the field, I think we should start with the gauntlets if it devolves into fighting, for detecting Wendy, and not going on a full on Murderface brand Murderspree. If things get serious, then bust out the sword, sayaka will probably "dis-arm" us before we start guinsooing the crowd. well, try to.

But we need to be clear to the world that this isn't setting a precedent, the Warmaster of the 9th does not negotiate with terrorists, Kidnapping and holding people hostage is not going to get them anything except a swift death.

We need to go Kenyan on these bitches, hard fast response, with an acceptable margin of casualties to show we have a hard line.

It takes you only a few moments to decide. You tell them to prepare for a contingency. Whoever this Lucius is, you can't trust her to keep her word. Squad Hiryu is to stand down UNTIL you engage Lucius - and when that happens, they along with Enishi coordinates with Kyosuke's squad to check for any suspicious activity. Said suspicious activity, of course, involves any Magical Girls about to transform, or detonate their Soul Gems. If they do find anyone, then either detain or put them down immediately, with as little involvement from the audience as possible. Sayaka stays with the client as always, and to be ready to physically haul her out of the stadium in the worst case scenario.

"...You're really going for it, huh?" Sayaka's voice still has that edge where it sounds like she's sneering when she's talking - but there's a faint hint of respect in it. "Well, I still think it's stupid for you to just walk right into this kind of trap, Murderface, but you seem to have things figured out."

"I do not mean to draw comparisons at such an inopportune time, Matsuda-sama, but..." Enishi's voice, on the other hand, has adoration writ clear in it. "...This is the opposite of what Miss Valnikov would have suggested. Of course, Miss Malal, Blessed Lady keep her soul always, would have straightened it out to match your plan, but...that in itself..." She lets out a sigh. "...I will not let you down, Warmaster."

"Neither will Squad Hiryu." Comes the chorus of voices that constitute the remains of your Vindicare overwatch squad. The way they sound is painfully familiar - anger barbed with shame and tempered with revenge.

"Orders received and understood, Miss Matsuda." Kyosuke chimes in last. "I'll have my squad spread out and prepare for a quick takedown response. This is our specialty, at least."

Right. That's good. You leave them to it - you have less than five minutes left before the song starts - and you quickly call Kyuubey on your smartphone. The mutant cat should know, at least. He picks up on the second ring.

"Matsuda?" Kyuubey seems surprised. "Well, this is a wonder. I don't think we've communicated this much in one single day. What can I do for you?"

On both your wrists, the golden bangles you wear underneath your sleeves give a pleasantly-warm pulse, as if politely reminding you of their presence.

How do you explain the situation to Kyuubey?

I just triggered my MAD SCIENCE! reaction.
We need to experiment with our shield.

First step is have Misaka program a combat AI for ground/air vehicles and possible ships.
Then we have to check if our pocket universe is time stopped or not. For this we can throw something that rots fast, however it won't be 100% accurate because it might experience a stasis effect. I suggest we throw in a person or something, preferably a magical girl because even if she dies, she'll be able to tell us if it was instant or what.

And then if the combat AI is successful and there is no stasis effect then we can make the tanks in our shield shoot from the pocket dimension.

Throw lit bombs in there.
No need to grab out grenades and pull the pin when you've got pre-pin-pulled grenades just waiting to be thrown.
Catch a missile mid-flight and shove it in there.
We can pull it out and point it during timestop and then light our cigarette with the pretty fireworks.

You give Kyuubey as complete and as concise of a rundown of what's happening - or at least, what's about to happen - as you make your way through backstage and out into the audience sections. You're almost pushed physically back by the combined noise of the cheering, raving crowd and the juddering speakers blasting out Ruri's synth-pop music - and you duck back into the soundproofed backstage as you finish your report. The mutant cat, to his credit, had stayed completely silent when you started, allowing you to talk uninterrupted. When he finally replies, he's all business, as usual. In fact, he even sounds even colder than before.

"I see. Well, it sounds like you've got the situation under control, Matsuda. I'll trigger a few contingencies to be on the safe side, although they seem unnecessary from what you're telling me." He makes a pleased noise, here. "Yes, I'm quite familiar with the Soul Gem Grenade tactic, but we've agreed that it's something to be frowned upon or taught. The collateral damage is usually not worth it, and cost-wise, it's a terrible way to blow up staff that you've invested heavily on training. Stopping the explosion itself..well, a well-trained Culexus could muffle the ensuing blast enough that all that happens is a spark, but not several all at once. And I doubt Omegon can handle something of that magnitude. She's not Malal." He pauses, here.

"Have Karasawa spread her awareness throughout the entire stadium to pinpoint abnormal spikes of magical energy. There's a ten-second delay in every Soul Gem detonation - it requires that much time for the jewel to become overcharged and go critical. If the mundane security is spread out enough, Enishi will be able to detect the spike and direct the nearest to apprehend the Magical Girl. Killing them or rendering them unconscious should render the charge inert."

...Right. You pass that on, quick as you can, to your team. Making sure they understood.

"As for turning this into good PR...hm. I'd suggest posing dramatically while your defeated enemy explodes in the background, I think? I believe that's how it usually goes." Kyuubey sounds pleased with himself, here. "And yes, I'll have our staff run a search on this Lucius personality. I believe I've heard of her before, but I'm not that sure. We'll see what we can do."

You glance at the giant digital clock on the stadium's scoreboard. One minute left to go. You break into a run, here, while still holding your phone up to your ear. With only a handful of seconds to go, you finally reach the dugout - a few more steps and you'll be on the field, making your way towards the pitcher's mound.

"Matsuda?" Kyuubey says your last name, here. You tell him you're still on the line - you're just making sure you're in place for your official 'debut'.

You're about to kill someone in front of a billion or so people. It's...not something that happens every day.

"Ah, I see. Well. I was about to wish you good luck, but I hear that bodes ill for the recipient. Instead, I will just read a note that Mami passed me right this very moment." He clears his throat. "Do well, Chiaki-chan, and I'll treat you to dinner tomorrow night. Just the two of us. I don't care if you're still on assignment then - I'm sure Miss Kirishima wouldn't mind."

...Right. Okay. You'll murder the fuck out of this Lucius.

"Good hunting, Matsuda."

You end the call here, and shove the phone back into your inventory. You glance back at the stage - Ruri's saying something to the audience, in her cheerful way - and it's then that the music starts up. Slow, mournful. The Waltz of the Spider Lilies is beginning.

Taking those final steps, you enter the diamond - and you make a beeline for the pitcher's mound as the crowd roars at your sudden appearance. It's here, then, that you spot someone else taking to the field, from the opposite dugout. A Magical Girl, clearly transformed, with a shock of blonde hair and gleaming crimson eyes. Her costume, a short and rather frilly black affair, ruffles with her movements as she matches you step by step.

And her sword, slung to her back, is...well. It looks like it could easily rival even the combined form of Gorechild and Gorefather in size. It's not so much as a sword as it is a large, flat plane of reinforced metal, with what looks to be the face of a dragon acid-etched into its surface. The effect is both impressive and disturbing - it looks as though the dragon's face is moving. But that's not possible, of course. Probably just a trick of the light.

It'll be a few more steps before you actually meet at the pitcher's mound.

How do you make your approach?

A cold, sharp mind of what needed to be done, sheathed with an almost heroic moral code that you stubbornly held fast to.

>http://archive.foolz.us/tg/thread/20161365/#q20161596
>You saw someone that needed saving. Someone that needed protecting. And you, Mami Tomoe, would not let that Magical Girl remain here for a moment longer. If she is well and truly dead, then at the very least, you can give her a decent burial. If she was still alive, then you can finally sleep a bit easier at night, knowing that some good comes out of being a Magical Girl.

As has been shown, Mami analyzes a situation and adheres to a moral code. She would attempt to secure her subordinate's Soul Gem before initiating combat.
Also, as noted that she keeps a core of cold logic to her actions, she would attempt to get as much intel from the leader of this rogue MG assault group before terminating the target.

The longer-term objective here is keeping Mami safe. This fight isn't against the Prophet, just one of her cronies, and winning here presumably isn't going to stop the Prophet from coming after us and Mami. Look, this chick is clever enough to set up a hostage situation right under a highly trained and elite skilled team of vindicares and callidus. Then she goes so far as to take one of those same vindicares, and draw us out.

She is clever, saavy, and likely highly skilled in techniques we are unaware of, we either need to end this battle in the first swing, or stay back and assess the target.

If she has been paying attention lately, she'll know Chiaki has been trying to be more like Mami, analytical, moralistic, and nice. She might not be expecting a direct approach especially from a trained vindicare. She could be prepared for it, but she can't be prepared for a FOFA response, especially if she doesn't have a golden weapon.

I'm being heavily outvoted here by nice people, which is fine, I've voiced my opinion, others have voiced theirs, and they're in the majority.

I doubt I'll get an opportunity to say I told you so. But I do hope it comes.

I can't reveal all of them all at once, but I do have some notes I suppose!

The First - The best. The brightest. The Ultramarines of the setting. They only induct Warmasters and Magical Girls of note. Location: The Moon.
The Second - The Holy Inquisition of the setting. Witch Hunters and seekers of Magical Girls turned rogue. Abhors heresy. Has a division called the Black Templars. Location: In a castle in Britain.
The Third: Dissolved. Incubator Status Unknown. Folded into the Ninth. Last known location: Japan.
The Sixth: Monster Hunters. The Warmaster is rumored to be a monster herself. Location: Australia.
The Seventh: The Peacekeepers. An Officio centered around peace and spirituality. The Incubator contracts Magical Girls seemingly at random, and gladly provides refuge for Magical Girls who want to escape from their Officio. Location: Unknown.
The Eighth: The Assassins. A very powerful Officio powered with the funding and technology of the most powerful nation in the world, America. The Incubator is a strange one. Location: Santa Destroy, California.
The Ninth: The Murderers. Equal to the Eighth in power, funding and technology through its shrewd Incubator, this Officio in Japan always gets the most lucrative of assignments, along with the Eighth. It also owns quite a lot of business ventures all over the world, and a mysterious R&D facility in Siberia.
The Tenth: The Thugs. An Officio that had taken to underground dealings to expand its power. Hires out its Magical Girls to criminal organizations.
The Fourteenth: The Soldiers of Faith. An Officio installed in the Vatican. Its Warmaster is a hedonist. Allied to the Second. Location: The Holy See.
The Seventeenth: The Canadians. Rumored to be in turmoil. (See Archival's writeups). Location: Canada.
The Twentieth: Rumored to be an organization made up completely of Callidus. Location and Incubator unknown.

These sound generally interesting. For chance of seeing them, the second/fourteenth could become plot-related pretty easily (especially since they seem kind of a package-deal), eighth/seventeenth obviously extremely likely, tenth is already here, third is gone, and the first pretty much has to become plot-relevant eventually.

Which leaves sixth, seventh and twentieth. Of course, 7 and 20 are both nicely set up to come out of left field, given their MOs. And who needs an excuse to go monster hunting?

If she's so clever, then charging blindly in is just all the more stupid. It's easy to prepare contingencies for brute aggression, but it gets a lot trickier when your opponent takes some time to think. We're not exactly stupid ourselves, we know this is a trap, so it's not like we'd be a sitting duck if we took some time to try to get some intel. Plus, even if we have been making efforts lately to be more methodical, our reputation is very much one of violence and aggression. Our old nickname was "Murderface". Lucius is referring to us as "Murderer". To think that she'd have a plan in place to take us down when we stop to talk but not for if we go full-aggro at the earliest opportunity is just silly.

Also, it's a pretty big assumption to think we can get this over with quickly with a single alpha strike. Charging in immediately is great if you're sure you can kill or incapacitate right away, but if that doesn't work you risk putting yourself at a much greater disadvantage than you would have if you'd taken some time to assess the situation. We do NOT have the upper hand here; we're responding to HER request to meet her for single combat at a place of HER choosing. Literary conventions aside (as if we could one-shot the boss, honestly now), it's unlikely that she would, if she is so clever, have called us out if she wasn't confident she could handle us.

From thread 89:

"Prophet?" Wendy echoes after a moment, blinking. "...Hmm. Can't say I have. Heard about a High Priestess, but..." You see her eyes flick over to the shadows in the corner behind you, before she shrugs. "They're not the same, right? I mean, they're sort of similar, religion-wise, but they're not really that close when you consider it." It's then that her eyes narrow, and you feel a curious tension in the air. "What about this prophet, though? What'd you hear about it?"

...You tell her. You're not sure why you told her, but hell, if you want to get anywhere with this line of inquiry - and make sure Mami stays safe - then you might as well go full disclosure, at least where this prophet was concerned.

"...It's not her, then." The brown-haired girl seems to sag with relief, a sigh drooping her shoulders. "She wouldn't do anything to hurt Miss Tomoe. None of us would. It's..." her expression crinkles in disgust, as if you'd just told her to join the bunny-eared girl in her noisy, sticky meal in the corner. "...it's one of those things that you can't force yourself to do, even if you've got a gun to your head, you know?"

Well. You're glad she feels the same way as you do with Mami, then, despite the fact that this line of questioning just went dead once more.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 09/27/13(Fri)09:00 No.27447918

You are a Magical Girl, and you're being reasonable at the moment.

Frankly, it's not something you're much of a fan of. But you're trying your best not to be anything like your predecessor - collectors of skulls and underwear of conquests - so reasonable will have to do.

Unless you start gibbering about the Flesh of Fallen Angels, or go insane from the bullshit having spoiled, entitled brats for idols as clients usually gets you.

Whichever comes first, anyway.

>> ☐ Deculture 09/27/13(Fri)09:01 No.27447922

You're being reasonable, and reasonable is what you're being.

The former you - the one you left behind a lifetime ago in a collapsed barrier as a headless, lifeless corpse, her face smashed into a concave, unrecognizable ruin by your own hand - would have gone for the kill the moment she set foot on the field your opponent had demanded you meet her on. In fact, you're pretty sure she'd have blown up the entire stadium - and everyone along with it - just to put an exclamation point on the whole thing. The old you would have burned the entire city if it meant catching the culprit in the flames.

It's a good thing you're being reasonable then, ignoring every cell screaming in your body to do just that. Ignoring reflex, instinct, and impulse to see the smirking Magical Girl making her way to you dead even before her body registers it, before gravity pulls her lifeless corpse down into the dew-moist astroturf in a crumpled heap.

Ignoring the tempting pull of the bracelets clasped on your wrists, stilling your fingers from the simple gesture of curling them into fists - knowing that gesture itself would be enough to signal the meek revenant sleeping within, and have her transform what should only be unremarkable-looking jewelry into huge robotic fists designed to destroy the indestructible with blunt force trauma.

Reasonable is what you are, reasonable is what's to be expected of you, and it's reasonable that this conceited little bitch with her oversized pigsticker and hilariously-oversized pistols hanging from her belts will get from you.

Because a reasonable Chiaki Matsuda is Tomoe Mami wants, and you're not about to disappoint her.

>>27447922

You know people are watching. Sure, the concert's still going strong, with your client still singing loud and proud on stage - but it's pretty hard to miss two people suddenly walking onto the stadium's baseball diamond like this, unannounced. You even heard Ruri's voice falter for just a second when you made your entrance, although she recovered easily enough.

But somehow, that stopped mattering. Everyone watching suddenly didn't matter. The wariness you felt earlier, in confronting the concept that you'd have to kill a fellow Magical Girl in national TV was also gone. All of it, replaced with a sudden and inexplicable desire to see this through. Down to its final, uncompromising, brutal finality.

Maybe you're just irritated and want this mission to be over and done with.

Maybe you've just been itching for a fight - you haven't had one ever since you got back from Siberia. Your altercation with Mine earlier wasn't even close to one, with the burly, slicked-back Yakuza easily buckling under the typical interrogation technique of applying a solid wall to someone's face multiple times.

Or maybe you just want to get to that dinner with Tomoe Mami. The both of you, alone, with none of this Warmaster crap to deal with. Just you and her. And probably pancakes. Definitely pancakes.

Well, whatever it is, you're here now. Standing exactly six paces away from Lucius - the Magical Girl who'd jacked into your comms frequency earlier, after having done away with one of your Vindicares. She called you out, right in earshot of your entire team, asking you to meet her in this exact place, for the sole purpose of humiliating you in front of the entire world. A last-ditch plan to challenge a Warmaster and prove how worthless she was, not only to her prospective clients, but also the girls she commanded.

She had also stopped walking, standing with her arms crossed over her chest. Still sneering, still looking at you like you're some sort of slouching fan about to pester an idol for an autograph. ...Yeah, actually, she does have the kind of air that would probably be ideal for an idol.

The thought makes you hate her more than you already do, and that's saying something.

At this distance, you finally get a close look at her costume. It's not that frilly now - rather, it's an outfit consisting of a black jacket, open and worn under a white silk camisole ending just slightly above midriff line. Her pistols' holsters are slung over a rather tight-fitting pair of spats, crossing over a polished belt buckle shaped like a screaming demon skull. Her boots are similarly black in color, with flared white cuffs and the toes capped with metal, each one engraved with one half of a popular American epithet you usually see printed on T-shirts and worn by clueless youngsters.

You'd probably laugh at how ridiculous her costume was - and yours is a boring, monochrome mess with fucking HEELS to run in on - but the fact that she looks halfway competent with the massive pigsticker slung on her back muffles the temptation a bit. The dual-hued pistols would probably be worth a chuckle or two, if you weren't also overcompensating with a goddamn .50 Action Express Desert Eagle made golden by an insane eldritchian nightmare.

"Hail, Murderer." Lucius grins as she bends her knee into a mocking little curtsey, her gloved hands taking the hem of her white camisole and spreading it slightly like a skirt. "Couldn't resist the idea of an honor duel, can you? I figured as much. The Warmaster of the Ninth never had a good track record with common sense, or restraint." She straightens up. "But then again, I'm glad for that. For once, I will take advantage of the Ninth's undercurrent lust for blood and skulls to save the world - from you and your Blessed Lady."

How do you respond?

That was exactly what we already told Enishi, Squad Hiryu, and the mundane security detail to do. We told them to use the distraction of the duel in order to get re-setup so that we won't waste any of the precious 10 seconds before a Soul Gem explodes getting into position.

>gembombs on a deadmans switch.
According to QB, the things work by overcharging the Soul Gem, and the process can be stopped by either breaking the Soul Gem, or even knocking the MG unconscious (implying that the overcharging is a continuous conscious action).

A deadman switch might be possible with some jury-rigging, but at that point we would have to destroy the Soul Gem. Though are you suggesting that the Soul Gem be modified so that it releases all of its overcharged power upon shattering?

>As I understand it, we could not use timestop while fighting Kirika because she had a similar time dilation power than we de Actually, the text makes it apparent that it's because she's able to keep us from cranking our shield. Time Dilation jamming Time Stop was mentioned once; checking archives for that.
>The shield on your arm - the device that stops time itself around you - is behaving strangely. It's clicking, as always, and you feel it grow warmer with each passing second - but there's something strange in the way it clicks. Like the gears are catching against something, unable to function.

>You'd have thought this strange, of course, if you weren't busy at the moment, snarling an oath at the cackling, black-garbed form of Kirika Kure as you roll to the side to dodge her just as she comes charging past - and it's then, on one knee, you start unloading at her general direction. Pulling the trigger far enough and hard enough that you're pressing it into the grip.

>The first shot takes Kirika by complete surprise as it slams right into her back, tearing into her uniform, tearing into flesh, and blasting her across the helipad. She manages to right herself in mid-air a split-second after, and you're shown just how quick and slippery the cackling bitch can get with her time dilation ability as you try to track her, firing all the while.

>It's difficult. She phases out of reality one moment, phasing in the next. Like an animation with some of its frames missing in between, her motion is incomplete, jumping and then landing in two places while being non-existent in between.It's her time dilation ability, working to her favor. Kirika is not giving you any time to activate your Time Stop, either - she's sticking close to you, making you move, making you dodge, making you react instantly just as you strive to blast her full of holes. She cackles as she hears your drum magazine click empty, and you curse as you let it drop and shove the other one in.

Why do you always get the mouthy ones? The kind who loved to talk themselves up, who gloating and hamming it up, like they're the protagonist of their own fucking third-rate anime? She's even got the posturing that Kirika had down to a science, shoulders thrown back, chin up, and such. Looking at you down the bridge of her nose like some fucking high-breed.

You shake your head irritably at this, before reaching into your inventory and taking out your slightly-squashed pack of cigarettes. You stick one between your lips, and cup the flame of your lighter as you light the tip, sucking in soothing smoke into your lungs as the tobacco ignites. You see her wrinkle her nose in faint distaste at the vice, and you snap your lighter shut before stuffing it back into your inventory.

Her frown deepens as you take the time to draw long and deep from the cigarette, burning it nearly halfway through. You hold in the smoke for as long as you can, before letting it out in a soft sigh.

It's when she's all but chomping at the bit to say something again that you growl out your reply.

"Soul gem." You say it simply, coldly, calmly. Not a request, but an undeniable demand. Holding out your hand - your empty hand - for emphasis. "Now."

"Ah, so she does have a tongue," Lucius grins, and she takes what appears to be a rather bloodied Soul Gem - a dark salmon pink in color, with brass gilding - from somewhere inside her jacket. "I have to say, for Kharn's successor, you seem to be much too concerned about your subordinates. It's...not exactly what I expected, actually."

...Well, what the fuck did she expect, then?

Lucius seems to consider the question seriously, blinking - before suddenly breaking out into another smile. A moment later, she starts to casually toss Ayumu's soul gem from hand to hand, in an infuriatingly casual manner.

"Honestly? I expected someone worse than Kharn. Someone wilder, more bestial, like the Sixth. Someone where elegance or finesse is nonexistent." She shrugs. "I am actually kind of disappointed. But more than that, I'm disappointed that you're even bothering to recover this from me." She snatches the Soul Gem out of the air in mid-toss, before holding it up between thumb and forefinger.

"Don't you know that subordinates are expendable, Matsuda?" Lucius says this with the air of someone about to start a very long lecture. "Kharn certainly thought that, not just for all the Magical Girls she'd killed - but for you and the rest of the cursed Ninth. You, Mami Tomoe, even her little freak of an Equerry. She spent the lives of the Ninth like a king spends coin." The blonde shakes her head as she looks at you, eyes narrowed in suspicion.

"Where is this uncharacteristic compassion coming from, Warmaster of the Ninth? Of course, I can sense your killing intent right this very moment - you do a very poor job of hiding it, even someone blind would be able to tell - but don't tell me that you actually WISH to protect everyone under your command from danger? From the repercussions of fighting under your emblem?"

You're silent at this, and she blinks at you incredulously before breaking up into peals of laughter. "W-what?...Ahahaha! Are you THAT optimistic of a fool, Matsuda?! Have you not realized that as Warmaster, such a thing is patently impossible, and speaks of a naivete that's witless as it is hopelessly insipid?"

A bit scary for the kidnapper, and certainly gonna make our officio want our babies. Seriously would your boss put their ass on the line for you? But again the downside is we just set a precedent here for getting our attention. Chiaki is going to be extremely busy in the future with all the kidnapping/blackmail to handle.

She's likely been planning to do it just to prove a point. The given options don't really make much of a difference in that area, just about when and how it would happen. While letting her ramble gives her more opportunity to do so, attacking her may have her destroy it sooner, or - worst case - cause us to possibly break it ourselves on accident.

This isn't exactly a situation we can get out of so easily. Maybe if we tried to act while she's distracted in her monologue, but it generally boils down to faith in the crazy girl's actions.

You allow Lucius to continue her high-minded, overly-elaborate lecturing - tuning it out with a roll of your eyes - as you quietly check up on the security detail, focusing on the muffled snatches of conversations coming from your earbud. Enishi, wherever she is, seems to get what you're trying to do - and her hushed voice immediately comes to the for, whispering in your ear with enough clarity for you to understand.

"Stop looking around, Matsuda-sama. Please keep eye contact with the enemy - I know her type, she'll stop and question you if she thinks you're not paying attention."

"Of course you'd know," You hear Sayaka snort softly - but it's then that she seems to capitulate, as if only suddenly realizing she'd spoken out loud. "O-oh. ...Shit. Sorry, sorry. Go ahead, sorry."

"...Frequency silence, please, trying to update the Warmaster here," Enishi breathlessly chides, before continuing. "In any case, I've managed to detect at least four distinct spikes in the stadium's magical field. I've deployed three of Kyosuke's squad to each one, just to be on the safe side. I'm sure there's a few more, no squad leader would take less than eight, most especially if it's a mission of this kind of magnitude."

Hnh. Right. Well, it's good to know that they've got it handled. Sayaka seems to be doing her part, too, sticking relatively close to Ruri. The idol, of course, seems to be a bit distracted with her singing - not looking at the audience now, but rather at you. As if anticipating the fight about to break out between you and Lucius. You could tell, and easily enough - the wall-sized screens put up around the stage for the benefit of those sitting in really cheap seats are focused on her, after all.

"....And furthermore, smoking is a filthy habit! Kharn had her vice with carnal pleasures and the drink, yes, but at the very least, she looked and smelled good while partaking in them! While you have an overpowering stench of stale nicotine and gunpowder hanging around you like some sort of foul, sentient miasma!" Lucius snaps at you, her eyes all but aflame. "If you're going to wear the rank at all, then have some respect for it, at least!"

. . .How the fuck did her lecture jump from trying to become a more decent human being than Valnikov Kharn to smelling good? You almost growled the question out, but you at least managed to stifle it into an irritated-sounding grunt, one the prattling blonde seems to take as your temper reaching its limit. Not knowing that you've already reached it way earlier - even before this stupid little mission started.

"The truth hurts, doesn't it?" Lucius giggles, here. "Ah, but I probably shouldn't be so hard on you. Your pathetic little run as Warmaster of the Ninth ends tonight, by my blade." With her free hand, she reaches up and back to grasp the skull-enrusted handle of her oversized sword - drawing it free from the sling it slept in with a smooth metallic hiss. The dragon etched on the blade seems to snarl in the shifting light. "Now I feel a bit silly trying to impart all that knowledge to you, seeing as you'll be dead in a few moments anyway. But never do anything halfheartedly, that's what I"ve always lived by."

...Right. If she's so raring to go, then can she at least give you the Soul Gem you've been asking her for the last half hour, then?

"Hmm? Oh, yes. I very nearly forgot!" Lucius laughs, shaking her head. She gives the glowing soul gem a small, playful kiss - before clenching her fingers around it in a tight fist, and then drawing her whole arm back. As if winding up for a fastball throw.

...Wait. What? No. No, she wouldn't't--

You could only watch as the Soul Gem hurtles past you, like a bullet - the glowing pink gemstone spinning end over end as it's thrown with enough speed and force that it's likely to shatter the moment it hits something. You turn back to snarl at Lucius - only to find that she's gone from where she stood only moments ago.

+ Up! Chiaki-san, look UP! +

Yuu's urgent warning tore your eyes upward - and you see Lucius's form plummeting down toward you, wielding her enormous pigsticker with both hands, the weapon brought up and back in preparation for a splitting blow from above. Cold murder in her eyes and unrestrained glee curling her lips.

"YOU AND YOUR PLOT WITH YOUR BLESSED LADY ENDS HERE, CHIAKI MATSUDA!"

How do you react? You only have mere moments to do so.

Actually, I think we can leverage pinky here. She wants to see Chiaki regularly, so we can just tell her that if she fucks around with our subordinates while we're stopped, we're not gonna feel like stopping time much (making sure not to be too assertive or firm unless needed, since she might rebel if she thinks Chiaki tries to take control). Worst case we know 100% she can't be worked with, best and we can get some assurance that she keeps her timestop-insanity to Chiaki only. And I do think it would work as long as Chiaki acted more wounded and reasonable rather than commanding.

>I was saying that if the trick DID NOT REQUIRE CONSCIOUSNESS then it was Ayumu's
>As it does then that is probably a grenade belonging to one of her unit
You said that since the trick requires consciousness, the Soul Gem that was thrown is from one of the suicide bombers.

That's the part that doesn't make sense. Because when the gem is removed from a body, the MG inside is unconscious, and therefore can't detonate the Soul Gem.

From what we know, the Soul Gem is most likely Ayumu's, NOT a grenade as you said it is.

Except the body doesn't instantly fall limp, they have a radius before it causes them to go unconscious which you would know if you actually watched the series

So Lucius could have easily taken one of her allies soul gems and had them stand near the dugouts while she does her little rant and then throws us a bomb

It doesn't matter if the shield is broken. We can try using it anyway. This is a situation where if you trigger the shield in advance that's great you can take action and if it fails YOU CAN STILL TAKE ANOTHER ACTION BECAUSE YOU TRIGGERED THE SHIELD IN ADVANCE

>blah blah blah I'm going to throw this soul ge-
>STOP, TIMEHAMMER
>if timestop works: grab soul gem, shoot bitch
>if timestop doesn't work: Oh shit it didn't work! At least I tried beforehand and now can recover and try to grab the soul gem now/defend myself instead of trying the timestop at the very last moment when I can either try to use my faulty trumpcard OR try to save the girl OR parry the lethal blow!

It's like you're double retarded. If your superpower is on the fritz, you try using it BEFORE things get right the way to the last moment. You should be prepared to - we were going to try to timestop ANYWAY at some point, better to have found out it doesn't work BEFORE we get to GRAB+DIE or PARRY+GEMSHATTER.

You decide to dive for Ayumu's Soul Gem - one hand reaching out for the glowing bauble about to fly out of your reach, the other reaching for your Shield in an attempt to engage your Time Stop before it does.

Yes, it's fucking naive to think you can protect everyone from the risks that every Magical Girl takes whenever they venture out into the field, in active duty. It's hopelessly optimistic, to believe that you can fix everything forever so that no Magical Girl ever gets hurt. But as far as you can remember, you've never thought like that. You've left that kind of thinking to Mami, and to Sayaka, and maybe Kyoko on a good day. But you never thought about anything like that, much less believed it.

What you do believe in is killing. Killing the enemy first before they can kill you, and any of yours.

It's served you well enough. It served you when Mami's safety was threatened, back with the Third. It served you when...well, you were trapped in that nightmare, along with Midori. Now...well. Maybe a bit of adjustment about that line of thinking wouldn't hurt, considering you're now responsible for more than a thousand Magical Girls. All of whom think you're some sort of ideal because you have the rank and the hat.

No better time to start than now, in any case.

Your fingers - slipping along the engraved surface of your Shield in your haste - finally manage to grip the edge, and you slam the entire thing in the position it needs to be to work. A harsh grind of gears gnashing into each other, followed by an ear-splitting shriek of of abused machinery - and the entire world freezes around you, bit by bit, molecule by molecule. The Soul Gem that was only heartbeats away from hurtling out of your reach slowing down, then slowing down some more, before finally stopping in place, completely solid, drained of all color. Just like the rest of the world.

Except you, of course. You're still moving, you're still falling forward - and you manage a gasp as your fingers curl around the frozen Soul Gem. You secure it in your grasp, just as you crumple heavily into the floor in a rather painful-sounding thud.

"Oh, Homura-chan! Is that a present for me?" The stench of perfumed decay hits you just as you hear her, and you look up at Pinky standing in front of you - both hands clasped to her cheeks. Her clawed fingernails drawing blood from her own skin. "Oh, how pretty! It's been a long time since you gave me a fresh Soul Gem to eat - I thought you'd forgotten! And this one looks delicious!"

Your eyes go wide as she reaches down to pry Ayumu's Soul Gem from your grasp.

What do you do?

You shake your head at Pinky, jerking the Soul Gem away from her prying fingers. Managing to scramble back up on your feet - shoving the material form of Kasuga Ayumu's soul into your inventory - you lean down to press your lips briefly against her cheek, promising her that you'll visit her later. This unexpected gesture gets you a surprised squeak, one that's soon followed by a rather miffed-sounding grunt of irritation.

"Eh? B-but...but I wanted that!" The eldritchian horror in the pink dress pouts, fuming, her sunless eyes narrowing. "I don't want just any Soul Gem, Homura-chan, I thought you knew that! They have to be special! I -- hey! You're not even listening, are you?" She growls here, an unearthly sound that should really have no place coming from anything human. "Grrr...FINE! SEE IF I CARE! TIME OUT FOR YOU, HOMURA-CHAN!"

You blink at this, and suddenly the Shield clamped on your right arm moves by itself - turning and locking in the opposite direction on its own accord, disengaging the Time Stop you've forced it into. There's the tell-tale stomach-turning sensation as time once more resumes its normal course, unfettered by your Shield's influence - but for some reason the metal disc feels heavier on your arm, now. As if it had suddenly been disabled--

It's here that you remember just what had been heading your way a few moments ago - and you look up to see that yes, Lucius was still on her descent to split you in half from skull to groin. Dodging it was easy enough - a quick roll backward managed to get you clear from the impact zone, the blade slamming hard into the turf and creating a neat canyon where you had been standing only a few moments ago.

Dodging the others - blistering cuts and swipes with her blade - had you desperately ducking and weaving out of the way. One particular slash had you using your Shield as a last-minute defense - and you winced as you heard the edge of Lucius' sword carve another notch among the others already lining the disc's once-flawless surface.

+ Um, you probably shouldn't visit the Blessed Lady now, Chiaki-san, + Yuu murmurs urgently. + She's not in the mood to receive visitors, it feels like. She'll be okay in a little while, though, I think she's just in one of her tantrums. +

Is that right? Well...yeah, you'll just check up on her later, you suppose. When you're not trying to get ten feet of acid-edged metal shoved inside you.

+ You could have just...well, wouldn't it have been easier to just let the Blessed Lady eat the Soul Gem? The girl with the sword is right, even though I don't like to say it. Don't you have a lot of other girls like her? +

...No. No, it's not that simple. It never is. You wanted to save her, not give her to Pinky as some sort of Pinky Snack.

+ But now you can't-- + Yuu protests, and you cut her off here, just as you avoid having your own head cut off by a crazed cultist. Yes, you can't stop time right now, but you've never relied on it this much. And if having to go without it for a while means you saved someone from having their Soul Gem snacked on, well...it's worth it. Saving

Ayumu's Soul Gem was worth it.

+ ...I understand, Chiaki-san. + The girl breathes into your mind. + Yes. I think I do. Thank you. +

"Hold still, Chiaki Matsuda!" Lucius cackles. "Come on, this won't hurt!"

...Christ, this bitch doesn't really give up, does she? If there was only something--

+ Ah, let me take care of that, then! + Yuu exclaims happily, and it's here that the bracelets glow from underneath your sleeves. A snap of blinding golden light - and a tingling that ran all the way from your fingertips to your spine - and you watch as your arms, up to a handful of inches past your elbow, is converted from skin, flesh and bone to flame-blackened robotic fists, each one very nearly the size of a small car, and each finger the size of an adult male's torso.

You blink at the sensory dissonance of it - your new arms and hands should be heavy, and they should feel ungainly and clumsy, but they're not. In fact, you could probably eat pancakes with them if you wanted to. Punching someone out would be a piece of cake with them. + I know I'm not as useful as the Blessed Lady's Gift, Chiaki-san, but I will do my best to at least be of use! +

You're about to pulse a reply of your own when you sense another incoming attack - but instead of dodging, you bring an arm up against it instead, turning on your heel to face the strike coming from behind. A dull impact registers against the back of your hand, and a slight tingling sensation, like someone running a nail across your skin - and it's here that you realize that you've just felt Lucius' sword scratch the carbon scoring of one of your gauntlets.

"Kh...!" Lucius jumps back, sword held en garde as she puts distance between the both of you. "So this is how the Corrupted Warmaster of the Ninth fights? With her Blessed Lady's sickening gifts?" She shakes her head here, before pointing her weapon at you. "Now I see the truth of it. You are beyond saving, Chiaki Matsuda. Submit yourself to my blade, and an honorable death."

The blonde narrows her eyes, just as crimson flame curls around her blade, twisting, coalescing.

"Let your quest to bring this world to ruin die with you."

It's here that you notice that the stadium had gone silent. Not just the audience - but the concert as well, with the idols crowding around Ruri as she calls out to you.

"KNOCK HER THE FUCK OUT, CHIAKI-CHAN! THAT'S AN ORDER!"

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 09/29/13(Sun)07:37 No.27480288

You are a Magical Girl, and you're about to kill someone in front of a live stadium audience. More than fifty thousand people who came to watch your principal sing and frolic in a dress three sizes too small for decency are going to be seeing you kill another Magical Girl in cold blood.

And with any luck, they'll think of it as all part of the show - all computer-generated holograms and special effects meant to keep them entertained for a few more moments, to help them get their money's worth.

With your back to the stage - not looking back at Ruri, who'd just told you to knock Lucius the fuck out - you lift one of your massive gauntlets and flash her a thumbs up from over your shoulder. The many servos in the oversized golden fist purring and whirring, the metal creaking with the moment.

The crowd - and Ruri herself - goes predictably wild at this, cheering, applauding, roaring their approval. You hide your disbelief behind a small smile, and you turn back to Lucius with a shrug, before putting up both metal fists in a typical boxing stance.

She heard your Principal. She said to knock Lucius out.

And you're going to do just that.

Oh, and break her kneecaps, too.

You're REALLY looking forward to that bit.

>> ☐ Deculture 09/29/13(Sun)07:38 No.27480298

>>27480288

Attempting to murder someone in front of so many people - it's not something you do all that often, and not something you actually get taught about in Vindicare training, or what little you can remember of it. For that kind of spectacle, an Eversor is usually sent. This situation flies completely in the face of what you've been trained to do - you're supposed to be killing from a distance, and never in the presence of more than three witnesses.

Not that you had any choice in the matter to begin with, or at least you'd like to think so. If Lucius is to be believed, you had everything under control - too well under control that she forced this kind of confrontation. A desperate gambit, to kill the Warmaster of the Ninth or die in the process.

Well, fine. You needed to stretch your legs anyway. You'll make a show of beating the everliving crap out of a rogue Magical Girl who's got it in her head that she's trying to save the world by killing you--

It's here, then, that you realize something.

You're not the hero here. Not in this situation at least.

No, Lucius - the Magical Girl standing in front of you, pointing her oversized pigsticker of a sword at your face, ethereal flames licking off the blade - legitimately thinks she's the hero.

And you're the boss she needs to kill for her happy ending.

...Well, whatever. If she thinks you're that kind of monster, fine. Who cares what she thinks? Sending you a severed head made to look like Mami, dumping her corpse in front of your convoy route to the stadium - not exactly something a hero would do to get the attention of the big bad evil guy.

+ She did that? She made you think that Miss Mami was dead? + Yuu's voice rings in your mind, as clear as if she was speaking right next to you. Probably because you've got the gauntlets on and everything.

+ That's...that's despicable. No honorable warrior would do something like that. + The young woman's voice, perenially muffled by her collar, is almost seething with hate. + Chiaki-san, let me give you my strength. I'll help you pound her into nothing more than a greasy smear in the ground. +

That's...huh. That's actually not very honorable either, but okay--

+ It's what the Blessed Lady would want, Chiaki-san. + Yuu pulses. + Purge the weak, purge the unclean, purge the unfaithful. The sharpest blade is contempt and the surest armor is hate. No mercy, no remorse. + She breathes deeply, here. + I learned that from the Second. They tried to induct me after I beat one of their Black Templar in a sparring match, but I had to decline. I still needed more training! +

Black Templar of the Second, huh? Sounds like a bunch of fanatics. Almost like Lucius here.

+ Oh, no! No, Chiaki-san! The farthest thing from her! They're polite and respectful and really only want to protect people from Witches! A-and rogue Magical Girls, I guess! +

Hnnh. Well. You'll have to ask more about them later. Right now--

+ Yes, yes. Lucius. + Yuu clears her throat here, a rather funny thing, considering she's not really talking. + Whenever you're ready, Chiaki-san. We'll show here what we're really made of. +

Right.

"Ngh. You're talking to her, aren't you?" Lucius's sneer turns into a disgusted frown, one gloved hand touching her forehead. "You're talking to the corrupted soul bound to that horrible weapon. I can sense it - like an itching in my mind." She shakes her head. "Truly another sign that you've too far gone to even consider saving. The rot has set inside much too deep, now, if you can hear their maddening whispers."

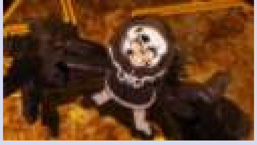
Well there is one thing that we should not do when fighting Lucius.

We should not hold up nor should we try to take her alive.



Because this bitch thinks that she is some great hero. When she realises that she is losing she is going to so some dickish move like charging at Ruri or going "PROPHET AKBAR!" and blow up her soul gem in an attempt to take us with her.

You make your decision right then and there - and you slowly lower your gauntleted fists, letting the creaking metal fingers - each the length of a full grown man's arm - relax and unclench. Stilling your breathing, blocking out all noise until the only thing you can hear is your own steady heartbeat.

+ Chiaki-san? Wait, why are you lowering your guard? This isn't the time to do that, Lucius might attack -- +

No, she won't, you reply. She's a hero. Or at least she thinks she is.

+ Then, why? I don't-- + Yuu starts again, clearly concerned, before she cuts herself off as realization dawns upon her. + Oh. OH. Chiaki-san, do you really...? + Her voice is surprisingly hesitant, here. + W-with me...? +

She was asking earlier, wasn't she? You couldn't help but grin, here. The Principal did say it was an order. And it's probably healthy for the both of you, too - to release stress together, in this kind of way. Besides, you trust her enough for that.

+ I...well, I offered it, but I didn't think you'd actually take it, Chiaki-san. + In the darkness behind your closed eyelids, a pair of orange dots flare into existence in front of you - illuminating an outstretched hand. + Let's...let's do it together, Chiaki-san. + Yuu's voice then gets an edge. + Let's teach this bitch a lesson. +

You take that hand, and-- >>27481112--a hundred memories suddenly flash past you.

Not your own. But Yuu's.

Like a photo montage on fast forward. Still images of people, of places.

Feelings. Scents. Joy. Hate. Sorrow. Pain.

A wizened old man with a white beard reaching down to his stomach and a turtle shell on his back, tearful behind his aviator shades as he wishes Yuu a safe journey.

A hundred or so fights, each one won with a single move practiced ten thousand times every day. Some sort of flying, twisting uppercut, one augmented with enough magic that it set her opponents on fire.

The excitement in every one, the joy of winning every single time, and a rather amusing concern for every single opponent who ended up with their clothes scorched and their egos bruised.

A battered and bloodied Wendy, her split lip and a rather ugly bruise on the side of her face taking nothing away from the calculating look in her eyes. The gleam of a kitchen knife held in a reverse stabbing grip.

And behind it all, the sound of a cackling, giggling goddess in a pink dress.

You opened your eyes just as the purple flame flared into existence in front of your left eye, just behind your glasses. The tongue flicking against the brim of the Warmaster's Cap, but leaving the material unharmed.

"What--" Lucius tried to say, her eyes widening at your sudden transformation. She wanted to say more, you're pretty sure of that - but she didn't have time left to say anything else, before you cannoned your right gauntleted fist right into her face in a blistering straight punch. The force of it enough that Lucius herself was sent hurtling back, before managing to right herself AND arrest her movement by stabbing her blade into the baseball field's turf.

"...That was a lucky hit...I'll give you that, heretic!" The swordswoman spits, wiping blood from her nose with the back of her glove. "That's all you get--"

+ No. + You hear Yuu chuckle, a dark, mirthful sound. + We will take everything from you. +

Even before Lucius could put up a decent guard - even before you could ask her what she meant by that - you were already charging her again, heedless of the fact that her sword could easily decapitate you with one stroke. It was a threat, that much was clear, but it felt like Yuu didn't care - batting a flensing cut away with one gauntlet while punching the other through her guard, making a few of her ribs crack with a sharp body blow.

You felt her wilt around you, the breath punched out of her lungs - and normally this would be the time to back off. But Yuu made you jump up, only to land heavily on the back of Lucius' neck, elbow first. You felt the crunching impact more than heard it - and for a brief moment, you thought you'd finished the girl off.

Until she started struggling in the one-arm headlock you suddenly had her in.

"Get your hands OFF me--" She started to scream, here. Yuu chuckles again, tightening the grip you had, and choking off her words just as she was about to spit them.

+ This is what it means to fight for what you believe in. This is what it means to fight with the Blessed Lady watching you. +

Two punches. Two brutal, absolutely face-crushing punches, swung into a face trapped in a headlock, with all the underhanded form of an outmatched boxer using every dirty trick he knew. The first impact stuns Lucius, her form slackening for one brief second before trashing again.

The second, delivered with just as much vehemence as the first, knocks her out completely -and Yuu had the sadistic grace to disengage the headlock at the same time, allowing Lucius to limply ragdoll clear across the field, her flight arrested now by her smashing right into the cushioned wall that seperated the bleachers from the field. She slides down from the dent she made, before falling - almost comically - on her face.

+ First blood to me. + Yuu all but sneers, but suddenly squeaks and makes an amendment. + Er, I mean, to us, Chiaki-san. +

You glance down at the giant robotic fist you'd just used to send a sword-wielding Magical Girl down for the count. Her blood flecking the carbon-scored edges.

For fuck's sake. How? HOW? You didn't even feel yourself move. Or run. You're barely even breathing hard, how did you just fucking cross the distance between you and Lucius in no time flat? That was TEN FEET! And what about all that other stuff?!

+ I...I actually have no idea myself, Chiaki-san, + Yuu's breathing seems to be heavy, here, but she sounds...happy. +B-but...it's exhilirating. It's like we're both one with each other. It wasn't like this with Kilgore, to be sure... +

You were about to reply, before a ragged shriek of rage cut across the field, even above the applause of the audience at your display.

"...HEATHEN! HERETIC!" Lucius is raving now, her once-pristine hairdo now in disarray and flecked with dirt. Her lip, split, and bloodied, seems to un-split itself in front of your very eyes. "YOU WEREN"T SUPPOSED TO HIT ME! I'M THE HERO HERE, I'M SUPPOSED TO WIN!" The leather strapping around the handle of her sword creaks as she holds it in a furious, white-knuckled grip. "AND STOP CHEERING FOR HER! " This she shouts at the crowd. "I'M THE ONE SAVING YOU! DON'T YOU REALIZE THAT?!"

She glares at you again. "...You've proven that you'll fight like some uncultured beast, Matsuda. Fine. Then I will, too." Lucius snarls. She irritably waves a hand, and two girls suddenly jump down from the audience, brief flashes of light enveloping their forms marking them out as Magical Girls that had just transformed. With their costumes still glowing from transformation-glow, they take up stance beside Lucius. "This fight is on my terms, and I'll see you vanquished no matter what."

How do you respond?

No. This was in a Q&B a while back. Decu made it specifically clear that Shield Storage is separate from Inventory.

Yuu puns aside, we did basically judo throw Sayaka in the first thread and she's quite a bit bigger than Chiaki. And we pinned her twice, once in the first thread and then when we physically threw her out of a car and nearly blew her brains out with the DEagle.

For such a small girl that favors ranged combat, Chiaki sure has no problem throwing around melee specialists that are bigger than her.

Or maybe Sayaka was just going easy on us.

You find yourself pacing, like a tiger in a cage, a smirk curling your lips as the oversized golden gauntlets blackened by carbon scoring sway slightly at your sides.

You keep pacing, grinning now as you look over Lucius' newly-summoned backup. Both of them have the same imperious look in their eyes that their Leader's own shone brightly with, lips pressed in taut, firm lines of determination. Unmoving despite the boos and hoots from the audience, the mob clearly displeased at this kind of behavior.

Eversors, if you're any judge. ...Not that it wasn't painfully obvious from their weaponry - one sported what looked like a giant, brutally-spiked wrecking ball on a chain, the other twin spears with bright crimson tassels attached to the blades.

"What's so funny, heretic?" Lucius spits, what damage you'd done to her all but regenerated now. ...Not as disturbingly fast as you'd seen Sayaka regenerate damage, but still quick. You'll have to take note of that. "Is your Blessed Lady whispering in your ear again, making her dark promises in exchange for spilling our blood?"

What? The concept is hilarious enough that it actually takes you by surprise for a second, and you shake your head. No, you reply. It's just that her idea of a hero is...well, it's pretty fucked. Would a hero really stoop to everything she's done? Sending you a head made to look like someone you love, how's that for a fucking hero? And now calling backup?

"A hero will do everything necessary to bring evil down." Lucius returns your smirk with one that's decidedly more shit-eating than yours. "My comrades realize this as well as I do. We give our lives gladly to the cause. To the Prophet's cause." She turns towards her companions. "Attack pattern Delta, at my mark. We'll bring this heretic's head to the Prophet ourselves."

Attack Pattern Delta? You chuckled at this, before slamming both your gauntleted fists together in a thunderclap of crackling impact. Fine, whatever. If she needs a handicap, then you'll oblige her.

"Strong words for a heretic about to die," Lucius spits, before roaring out a single word. "GO!"

"You're a faggot, Lucius-chan," You breathe out into the cold night air, and it's then at that moment that Ruri decides to strike up the music again. It's...a different song. A heavy, brutal song, deliciously offset by her clean, almost innocent vocals.

...Hyper Love Punch? Was that the title?

Heh. Well. Maybe your client isn't as bad as you thought she was.

You glance around, and realize that Lucius and her two other goons are charging you - each from different directions. Trying to divide your attention. In a few seconds, you'll be overwhelmed.

Pattern Fucking Delta, alright.

How do you react?

[]Charge Lucius. Take out the leader and the rest falls into place.
[]Charge the underlings first. Save the best for last.
[]Take them all on at once.
[]Get airborne and blast them with the autocannons.

>A Magical Girl's inventory is sort of like a portable hammerspace. It's different from Chiaki's shield, think of it as an equipment slot. It can be stolen from, and such!

It's been a while, but our Inventory generally does not carry weapons. It has our phone, lighter, cigarettes, debit card, and two emergency pill canisters (though I think they're empty now).
We've used it to store weapons, yes, but that generally is the Shield Storage.

It's funny how a scene of sitting under a bed in an entirely empty school makes for so much better tension and heart-throbbing adventure than being in agigantic stadium and fistfighting some murderhobo while the threat of suicide bombers lurks.

It's all about the context.

You decide to take them all on, all three at once. Sure, you could have gone for a single person in their party first - in fact, that's probably the most logical choice to do in this kind of situation - but you're not in the mood for logical, here. You've got robot fists for hands, and the soul of a psychotically-talented martial artist boiling in your bloodstream, and your client is playing a song about a Magical Girl who just loves punching people a lot.

...You're not exaggerating about Yuu, by the way. Your body feels light - almost unnaturally so, your movements smooth as silk and completely effortless. A far cry from your usual sluggish self, where every act of celerity is made with gritted teeth, strained muscles and a stubborn denial of the concept of pain that only relents if everything you hate is already dead. Even with the gauntlets - and you know from the damage they can do that they're large, unwieldly and unbalanced things - they're as light and as responsive as your real hands. Except, you know, they don't really hurt if they hit something.

Flesh of the Fallen Angels indeed.

Dual Spear Girl reaches you first, one spear draw back in preparation of throwing at you point-blank, the other held low for a gut-thrust. You process this in the moment it takes for your heart beat once - and even before she let her first spear fly, you've already slipped right into her guard, your face inches from hers.

You give her time to blink, before slamming your forehead right into the bridge of her nose.

There's a satisfying crunch as your headbutt connects, the impact dislodging your Cap and knocking her back, both her hands empty of spears as she tries to shield her now-bleeding face from you. You take this opportunity, then, to step forward and ram five feet of carbon-blackened gold right into her stomach - and she drops to the ground, the wet sound of someone's lunch being deposited on first base mingling with the acrid scent of stomach acid.

You ignore this, however, and catch the accursed hat with the tip of a gauntleted steel finger. You manage to place it back onto your head, just in time to sidestep out of the spiked wrecking ball's path. The horrendously-brutal weapon punches into the ground with explosive force, all but obliterating the very spot you'd been standing only milliseconds earlier.

You glance up, following the chain attached to the brutal projectile, cocking one massive fist back for a counterattack - only to see Lucius charging in again with her sword, her eyes burning bright with disgust, rage, and hate. You dodge the first slash, duck underneath the other, and then slam both fists together in a blade-handed prayer clasp - catching the overhead cleave seeking to split your skull in two. Sparks, whining servos and protesting metal all shriek from the clinch as Lucius tries to recover her trapped weapon, but you hold fast, a grin baring your teeth.

"Having fun, heretic?" The blonde Magical Girl seethes through bloody teeth. "You won't be smiling so much when I take your head as a trophy."

You frame your reply to that by tugging back on the sword, hard - pulling Lucius off-balance long enough for you to smash a car-sized metallic fist right into her jaw. Again, this time with the other. And again, once more with the right. And then the left.

No, I think the series in general needs to go easier on the throttle and a bit more contemplative and methodical again. Less action, more noir maybe?

>>27484437

A series of unrestrained, unfettered face-pummeling, with you taking your time to twist fully for the complete rotation. Your unfortunate victim held in place by your right foot pinning hers to the grassy floor.

"This is pretty much going your way, isn't it?" You hear yourself cackle as you continue to beat Lucius' face in, Yuu's voice echoing yours in perfect synchronization. "Tell me - do you feel like a hero yet?"

You step off of Lucius' foot just as you send her flying again with another straight right, the servos in your gauntlet roaring as it tried to keep up with your demands. The impact of it felt satisfyingly solid, and the sound of a mechanized gauntlet hitting a human body with enough force to pulp a grown man's organs by the force alone sounded nearly as lovely.

Skidding across the now-ruined astroturf, her momentum making a furrow on the once-pristine grass, Lucius collapses in an unmoving, boneless heap. Her sword on the ground beside her, its blade still pathetically unmarked with your blood.

A woosh of air, and the chime of taut chain, and you sidestep another swing from Wrecking Ball, before reaching out and grasping the chain itself. Your metal fingers locking around the links, you give it a casual pull - and the girl at the other end yelps as she is sent hurtling forward, towards you. You let go of the chain, before darting forward and smashing her into the ground, back first, with a stiff-arm clothesline. You felt the entire building shake - AND six of her ribs break with that.

...Yeah, okay. Pinky's crazy, that you'll admit. No argument about that.

But you can't really say that she doesn't know how to make something horrifically lethal.

And these are just gauntlets. Oversized punching gauntlets with autocannons inside each finger, yes, but still just gauntlets.

Just how much deadlier are the other weapons? Kharn's chainaxes? Kirika's Muramasa?

You shake your head at this, before moving to finish Lucius off. You walk forward, crunching both fists into each other in anticipation. Sparks flying off of the contact, opposing power fields crackling spitefully and spitting electricity.

It's here, then, that you feel it. A prick of pain, at the center of your back, followed by another, and then another. Then, a warm wetness, bursting from somewhere on your chest and spilling out to your costume, to the inside of your jacket. You look down and see two - no, three metal blades sticking out from your jacket, each where your lungs should be. All three red and dripping with your own blood.

Motherfucker...!

You turn around and see Dual Spear Girl bearing down on you from above, spears manifesting in her hands. And all around her too, hovering in the air and waiting to shoot forward.

Her face a mask of bloodied hate.

"For the Prophet," she murmurs, death in her eyes.

What do you do now?

AL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/01/13(Tue)08:14 No.27515811

You're a Magical Girl, and you've just taken a spear in the back.

No, actually, you took three of the fuckers right there, all three of their pointy ends sticking out of your chest in a perfect row, like some sort of sea-dwelling deity had decided to fuck with you right then and there and speared you with his giant fucking salad fork.

>> ☐ Deculture 10/01/13(Tue)08:16 No.27515833

Funny thing is, though - it doesn't hurt. Sure, you feel them in there, you feel the weight of them settling on your chest with every breath you take, the unnaturally-disturbing sucking sensation around the wounds as you pull in air - but as far as pain's concerned, it's not like they're even there. Hell, you could probably keep on beating the shit out of Lucius and her little group even with these spears sticking out of you, and you've kept on with worse.

Problem is, Dual Spear Bitch - the girl who gifted you the three toothpicks in the back, just as you were about to put Lucius out of commission permanently - was now looking to gift you a few more, a veritable horde of her spears hanging in the air around her, all of them aimed toward you.

It's to note here that for the majority of the fight, you've been letting Yuu take care of most of the fighting - translating your own thoughts and instincts into pure brutality that you didn't know could exist in someone as soft-spoken and polite as the dark-skinned little girl. Especially the bit where she trapped Lucius in a classic playground bully headlock, laughing in her face before administering two of the most painful-looking punches to the face that you've ever had the pleasure of actually inflicting. That was all her - you merely provided the impetus, the need for it.

But now, in the moment just before you could be known as the very first Warmaster to die as a pincushion - both you and the girl residing inside one of Pinky's cursed Golden Weapons reacted at the very same time, and moved to accommodate that reaction AT the very same time.

Namely, shoving both gauntlets forward, fingers splayed and aimed right at the girl about to fuck you over with her lancer bullshit. A cacophony of metallic clicks and servo-snarls issuing from each fingertip as every single one readied to launch a barrage of shells at whatever they were pointing at.

Nobody gets to fuck with you and live to giggle about it.

>> ☐ Anonymous 10/01/13(Tue)08:18 No.27515840

yes yes yes

>> ☐ Deculture 10/01/13(Tue)08:19 No.27515841

>>27515833

You didn't quite see how it happened, but you saw the aftermath.

Ten fingers, five for each gauntlet. Ten autocannons, firing at the same time. Firing not only for effect, but to kill. To stop the target from moving, from existing. Subjecting everything in front of you in a torrent of hellfire.

It was only for a few seconds - you wanted Dual Spear Bitch down, not rendered into a thick pink mist - but even as you blinked away the smears of color that the combined muzzle flash of ten autocannons firing at once left on your retinas, your shoulders felt as if you've been firing something disgustlingly high-caliber without even bothering to brace properly for a week. The gauntlet's fingertips, where the cannons had jutted out from, glowed red-hot from heat stress - and the resultant gunsmoke was so thick even the cigarette you'd been nursing all this time finally died, its tip extinguished in the already-dissipating miasma.

When the last of it finally cleared, you saw Dual Spear Bitch on the ground, her spears reduced to mere splinters around her - and her costume all but torn away, only scraps left protecting her modesty. Her right arm ended in a bloody stump, while her other remained crossed over her chest. ...Probably managed to put up a shield at the last second. Other than that, she's still breathing, but unconscious.

Meteor Hammer Cunt and Lucius are both trying to get up again, but you have a few moments before they're back in action.

Weird.

[]Finish Dual Spear Bitch off. No mercy. No remorse.
[]Leave her, and go after the remaining prey left.
[]Other.

Weapons and abilities can evolve over time with training. In canon, Mami's magic only gave her a ribbon, so she was technically a melee character before she trained herself how to form them into rifles.

You're probably right. I would imagine her being a Vindcare was just a luck of the dice kind of thing because she probably never used melee weps before turning into a magical girl, but had tons of experience with rifles.

Then 2 years latter QB notices that 90% of the time she is using her guns as a club more often than not, beating people to death with her metal hands, or resorting to the knife her dad gave her that was made out of tank armor, and tells her to go pick out a melee weapon from R&D.

You decide to let Dual Spear Bitch sleep the rest of the fight off. Much as you'd like to do things your own way, here, it's probably best if you kept that kind of action out of sight from the audience. You already knocked her out and blew most of her clothes AND her arm off - no need to make things more than PG-13.

Keeping both Lucius and her remaining lackey in view, however, you step up casually towards Dual Spear Bitch's supine form, checking her once over for her Soul Gem. Using the toe of your shoe, you nudge her onto her stomach - and you see what you're looking for, a bright purple sliver of light embedded in what looks to be a cross-shaped hairpin.

You reach down and pluck it free from her hair with a giant-sized finger-and-thumb pincer. Just as you hold it up to the light, a slot on the back of your other gauntlet slides open. + Store it in there, Chiaki-san, + Yuu helpfully volunteers. + It'll be safe in there, and she'll be sleeping the entire time, so there's no danger of her Witching out or something. + Really? That's pretty handy, you think. You thank Yuu for the assist before dropping the Soul Gem in, hairpin and all. The slot's lid slides back into place, locking tight with a hiss and a click.

+ Only for you, Chiaki-san. + The girl replies cheerfully. + Ah, should we take care of the other two, then? +

"N-no...no!" Meteor Hammer Cunt screams, her cry a ragged one made with desperation and rage. She staggers back to her feet, helped up by a rather disheveled Lucius. "Get away from her! Give HER SOUL GEM BACK, YOU MONSTER!"

"Stay strong. We'll get her back." You hear Lucius growl at her with conviction, before turning to glare at you with a renewed determination. "This isn't over yet, Matsuda. Not while I still draw breath."

If her underling dies, she now has the crisis of "not being heroic enough" and she starts to make even more stupid mistakes if she actually escapes.

Lucius has also shown us that she's vain. She fancies herself actually winning the duel regardless of whatever tricks it took.

Her first resort to being outmatched was to call her lackeys to team up on Chiaki. If we take Meteor Hammer girl down now, and she thinks she can't finish us, she'll threaten us with the bombings.
If we manage to take Lucius down first instead, there's a high chance she already told her suicide bombers to go on with it when she goes down.

Either through prolonged fighting or talking, I'm just opting to buy time.

I thought I'd support the talking just because of the chance of revealing internal discord, no matter how little. It doesn't matter if it goes through or not.

You allow yourself a small chuckle as you decide to go after the one with the Meteor Hammer, casually walking towards both her and Lucius, gauntlets clenched into loose fists at your side as the spears sticking out of your back gently knock against each other with your every movement. What the fuck happened to her girls being disposable, of being ready to sacrifice themselves for 'the cause'? Seems like Meteor Hammer Cunt's not actually that ready to give up her life - or her friend's - as Lucius are. Are they really devoted to dying in Lucius' command, or simply just allowing themselves to be caught up in the flow?

"SHUT UP!" Lucius all but roars at you, drawing both her pistols with an experienced gunslinger's finesse despite her obvious injuries. "Don't listen to her, Kana! She's only trying to trick you! Remember who she is and who she's fighting for! Remember how many of us she killed--"

"I KNOW!" The girl called Kana screams, and it's with a sudden crash of disassembling metal that her Meteor Hammer splits in two spiked halves, before splitting even further into pieces that then latch onto her legs, her arms, her feet, her torso. Forming what looks to be a bulky metal carapace studded with spikes, with one particularly-huge section forming as her back armor and two smaller ones forming menacing gauntlets. "I KNOW WHAT WE HAVE TO DO, I KNOW WHAT SHE DID - BUT I'M NOT LETTING HER TAKE KIZUNA-CHAN FROM ME!"

Her tirade ends in a wordless shout, and she leaps at you, ignoring Lucius' command to hold. One thorn-mailed fist pulled back, the girl evidently angry enough to try and go in to trade punches with you. Not particularly a tactically-sound move - that's what you've been doing to them - but then again, these girls were fighting with nothing to lose, and everything to fight for.

..The irony isn't lost on you, of course. Even when Kana - to her credit - manages to catch you unaware, one single punch out of the dozen she'd smashed in quick succession against your gauntlets raised to block her connecting solidly against your ribs. You wince at the sound of your ribs breaking there, at the sensation of three spikes puncturing costume fabric, skin, and then muscle - but again, there was no pain. Only the warm sensation of blood leaking out where it's not supposed to be.

You bat away her attempt to cave your skull in with a spiked overhead chop with one hand, while Yuu - resourceful, brutally-efficient Yuu - catches Kana's chin with a dirty fighter's uppercut, one delivered with enough bloodthirsty malice that you probably should ask the young woman if she's got anger issues or something. This sends the spiked girl flying back and landing with a crunch on her back, a fall she doesn't seem particularly in a hurry to get up from.

"KANA!" Lucius screams from behind you, and you absently raise a gauntleted hand to shield yourself from the sudden storm of gunshots. Well, at least someone's learning.

"I'll make this offer only once," You say to the supine, barely-conscious Kana over the sound of Lucius unsuccessfully trying to shoot through a metal gauntlet forged from a Goddess' fragmented soul. "Give up, and I'll let you live, along with your friend here." You gesture towards her leader with your free gauntlet. "Say no, and..." You let the silence hang between you as you shrug. "...I'll try not to enjoy killing all of you too much."

"...T-the choice...you offer...i-is no choice at all..." Kana manages to whisper through a broken, slowly-knitting jaw. "...We have...we have to kill you, or everything dies..." She takes a shuddering breath, here, as she struggles to get up. "Everything dies in fire and misery and despair. As...as long as the Blessed Lady's Shieldmaiden still draws breath..."

How do you react?

Right now we are fighting a battle that could be avoided with a weapon that shouldn`t have been our first choice as a Vindicare without our Abilities.

How is not splattering people who are following a misgided tart like Lucius being Mother Teresa. Explain that to me.

Besides, you are wrong, we did longer talks multiple times when we needed to explain something, this is one of those moments that needs an explanation.

Most of the votes are to knock the girl out so that we can take her Soul Gem and interrogate her when Lucius is not shooting at us.
You know, the whole mid-battle speech thing while someone is still actively shooting at us and there's still an unknown number of suicide meguca's in the crowd, as we bleed out from 3 spear wounds to the chest and a set of broken ribs, and an additional 3 puncture wounds. That's why stopping to talk when someone other than the person we are attempting to diplomance is still attacking and shows no signs of stopping, is like being Mother Theresa.

You blink down at the young woman still struggling to get up. Is that what her Prophet said? That you're in cahoots somehow with Pinky? If that's the kind of bullshit they're operating on, then...you have no words. No fucking words at all, except shaking your head and telling her just what you felt about that kind of prediction. Namely, how it's so much utter bullshit that the idea of you suddenly becoming an idol is believable.

"D-don't...don't talk about her like that, monster," Kana manages to gasp out, exhaling blood with every other syllable. "She...she sacrificed everything...to know the truth. The death of her loved one...e-everything she cared about...she suffers still, and it's all because of you." More blood gushes forth from her mouth, this time black, the color of diseased ichor. "We will...never stop..."

You shake your head at this. Whatever Lucius - and this Prophet - had taught them, it's sticking. You could probably convince them with a bit more time, but time isn't exactly on your side, here.

Still blocking Lucius' desperate gunshots, you grab hold of Kana's armored leg - the girl groaning in pain - and it's with barely a grunt of effort that you swing her upward, before slamming her into the ground in a quick, merciful downswing. Her armor breaks apart in the impact, fragments of it flying off. She weakly mewls a name - Kizuna - and you take that as a signal to smash her into the dirt. Again. And again.

Kana mercifully loses consciousness on the fourth swing, and you let her leg slip out of your grasp. Her Soul Gem, a rather darkened emerald one, ends up sharing the same slot you placed Kizuna in. You then make a show out of patting your gauntlets together, as if to dust them off - and the crowd cheers again, louder this time.

You ignore this as you turn to face the last remaining member of this little party - namely, a red-faced Lucius, whose pistols had long run out of ammunition, the black-and-silver handcannons ending up discarded on the astroturf. She's got her sword again, this time in a defensive position.

"The Prophet was right," Lucius sneers through a sheen of sweat, of fatigue, of fear. "You are a monster. No different than the Betrayer was, and yet so much worse."

This again. Is she ignoring the fact that holding civilians hostage with suicide bombers isn't exactly heroic--

"We have to do what is asked of us." Lucius seethes between gritted teeth. "This may seem evil to you, but we consider the potential casualties as necessary, in light of the many deaths that will happen if the prophecy is allowed to come to fruition." It's here that her sword begins to glow an unhealthy crimson light. "They may judge us as murderers now, but history will declare us as heroes that rose up to fight against the evil when no one else would."

...Right. Fine. Obviously, there's no reasoning with this bitch.

"Ten prospectives apprehended and restrained, Matsuda-sama." Enishi whispers again. "Just a few more, I'm positive of this."

How do you proceed?

She will protect them because they are for one useful and it is her job to minimize casualties. As well as her soft spot for them since they aren't shooting at her at the moment.

No more talking. No more diplomacy. This little show stops here, and no further.

You take one single deliberate step towards Lucius - the purple flame curling in front of your right eye sparking once, before gouting out anew in a sudden blaze - and it's then that you cede control to Yuu. The girl inhabiting the XI Golden Weapon is all too ready to accommodate you, and you feel your own body pushed to its limits once more as she sends it hurtling towards Lucius, right gauntlet cocked back in preparation for murder.

...Whether she was expecting treachery or not, Lucius doesn't show - her expression of gritty determination unchanging as she blocks your first punch with her blade, then the second, then the third. Using her sword as a mobile plane of thick, reinforced steel to bat your strikes away, each impact sending sparks flying everywhere, punctuating the bell-like gong of metal slamming into metal. The crowd cheers yet again at this display, as if finding something worthwhile to watch in the act of a Magical Girl doing her level best to kill someone fanatically, irrevocably dedicated to a cause. Someone who will not rest, who will never consider surrender, will never even think of giving up on her quest.

It's here, then, that Lucius manages to score a hit. Just after you deflect a particularly lethal riposte with your right gauntlet - the tip of the blade creating another furrow in the carbon-scored surface - it's here that Lucius suddenly pulls her sword back, and thrusts it forward again, faster than you could react, faster than she'd ever moved in the entire ordeal. An entirely naked, blatant sword thrust to the gut, her entire weight forced behind the blow.

It takes you completely by surprise. And going by Yuu's own gasp of pain - it took her by surprise, too.

"For the Prophet," Lucius growls, and she shoves forward again, filling your ears with the liquid crunch of two meters of steel going into your body.

And it hurt. Fuck, it hurt. Enough to take your breath away, enough to suddenly bring back the dulled sensations of the spears piercing your lungs with perfect, agonizing clarity. Blood - your own - floods your mouth, drowning your tongue in its bitter, coppery flavor. It spills down your chin, down your costume, and then in a spray as Lucius suddenly rips her sword out of you. Sending you to your knees, your gauntlets suddenly much too heavy but managing to support you from falling flat on your face all the same.

...You're not too sure if it was Yuu, or your own imagination, but you heard someone screaming your name. And it kind of sounded like Iori.

"...I...I did it." You hear Lucius laugh, breathlessly, one arm hanging useless at her side, broken in three different places by one of your well-placed punches. "...The Shieldmaiden is...vanquished. T-thanks to me, and...everyone." She giggles here. "E-everyone, please...whoever's still on my frequency. Pray...pray for the Prophet, and begin your ascension rites. Pray for the Prophet's suffering while you do so. I will deliver the Shieldmaiden's final sentence after."

In your ear, you faintly hear Sayaka screaming that she's going after you - and Enishi screaming at you at you about how..all of the suicide girls being apprehended, finally.

"Any last words, heretic?" You look up to see Lucius holding her sword one-handedly, its tip pointing up to the moon. An executioner's stance, matching her executioner's smile.

The entire stadium is silent enough that you could hear your own heartbeat. Even the music's stopped.

The purple flame in front of your left eye is...almost dissipated into nothing. As if the fuel making it burn is just about to run out.

How do you react?

You laugh, here. Despite the sharp stabbing pains that each spearpoint buried inside you brought with every breath, and the core of agony throbbing where Lucius had run you through - you manage to laugh. A breathless, soundless laugh, made only obvious by the shaking of your shoulders and the smile on your face.

"I'm giving you a chance to speak your dying words, and this is how you spend it?" Lucius is getting back the imperious air she'd lost in her rage earlier, back when you were pounding her face in. "...Very well, heretic. Die laughing, as your Blessed Lady will also die, and all who follow in your footsteps--"

"No more bombs," You finally gasp out, after spitting out a mouthful of blood at her feet. "No more fucking bombs. Caught them all, like fucking Pokemon." You smile at her, revealing blood-pinked teeth. "No more bombs, fuckface."

"W-what...?" Lucius's eyes go wide, all color draining from her face. "B-but--"

She doesn't finish her sentence, opting instead to bring down her sword in a perfect, flawless downward cut. One that probably would've cut down any Magical Girl in half, from scalp to groin.

You - or rather, Yuu - caught it with your gauntlet. There's a shriek of protesting metal as the sword actually cuts deep into the metal fist, revealing brilliant, glowing gold underneath. You hear Yuu scream in pain and rage at this, and she roars a curse that has no business being in the swearing repertoire of someone her age or height.

The gauntlet flexes, then clenches, and Lucius' sword snaps in half with an explosion of crimson light, followed by the dying scream of some mythical winged beast that breathed fire.

Your would-be executioner screams at this, falling back on her ass, on the blood-soaked astroturf, just as you shakily manage to get up off your knees. The gauntlets fading with a burst of golden light, leaving you with your wounds, and the Golden Desert Eagle in your hand.

Lucius is screaming at you now. Screaming, crying in fear. Her eyes locked directly with yours.

The flame dancing in front of your left eye has returned, weak but still there. Faint but still there.

And you smile as you raise the gun in your hand and aim down at your prey. The safety automatically undoing itself.

"Fuck you." You hear yourself whisper, and you pull the trigger.

My breath caught in my throat as I stood outside the heavy wooden doors. It should have been routine – no, less than routine. This should have been effortless. Should have been fun. We were supposed to be best friends. Made bracelets, traded blood. Cut up a neighborhood cat together once. Hell, she was my first kiss. My first time. My first…everything. But as I stood in front of the door to the biggest fuckoff penthouse suite in the city, all I wanted to do was throw up.

Felt like I spent an hour surrounded by shitty wrestling merchandise before the door creaked open and Nico's maid poked her head out.

"Ah…my apologies, Miss Cooldown. I didn't expect you for another few hours, but please. Come in." She gave me a small, sweet smile and ushered me inside. …Never really knew how to deal with being waited on.

The place never ceased to amaze me. It was a bachelor pad for someone with way too much money and way too many hobbies, and every time I visited there were more creepy posters coating the walls and more shelves lined with crap, and some poppy anime garbage filled the room, apparently the menu theme for one Bizarre Jelly DVD or another. I stared at the TV screen for a second before a glimmer of yellow-blonde hanging off the arm of the couch caught my eye.

…She asleep, or what? Jade gave me a little nod when I asked.

"Lately, Milady's been getting…carried away." Yeah. I knew that much. "Usually she's up and about again after a good night's sleep, but I…couldn't in good conscience let her go out as she is."

I put it together pretty well. …The maid drugged her. Heh.

"…I'd prefer not to think of it that way." Her eyes flicked toward the couch, and I could swear I saw just a hint of a familiar smile. That's right, her name was Jade. …They looked a lot alike, when she smiled. Kind of eerie. "…Miss Cooldown?"

…Must have been staring.

"Hmm. At any rate, I was hoping…well, I'm not much of a cook, regrettably, and Milady, er…" …thinks pizza is a vitamin. “…Yes. I thought…she might really enjoy a meal served by you. I’ll help with whatever you need me to, of course.”

…Seriously?

I stared at her for a long second before the pleading look in her eyes got to me.

…Beef. Shrimp. Eggs. Chicken broth. Some fresh vegetables. I gave her a short list of ingredients to pick up. …Egg drop soup, with shrimp fried rice and a big, fat cheeseburger to go with. It was kind of exciting, in a way. Didn’t get to cook much around the Hole anymore, and…I don’t know.

She scared the shit out of me sometimes, but I still cared about her. I might have even smiled, if it weren’t for a certain pressure on my head a moment later, accompanied by a tiny, catlike grin from Jade. …She’d forced her frilly little hairband onto me.

“It suits you. Please take care of our lady in my stead.” …I could do nothing but watch her slink out the door while I worked my jaw. …But it didn’t feel bad, I guess.

For someone that claimed not to be much of a chef, she was a pretty big help in the kitchen. Took direction fluidly, naturally. Like she knew the recipes I was using better than I did. …She told me later she knew a lot of recipes, trying to cook like this. They just…didn’t turn out well for her. Didn’t have much of a sense for it, she said, and she got distracted a lot.

…Nico probably just didn’t leave her alone much.

Everything was just about finished when she went quiet, like the idle chatter in her died all at once.

“…Miss Cooldown?” As we played everything up, she spoke again. …There was no trace of the cheer she’d had a moment ago. “If you…if you don’t mind letting me handle the rest, there was something else I wanted to ask you for, while you’re here.”

Are you trying to get me out of the room so you can drug her food?

“What? No. Nothing like that.” Her eyes flicked away again. “…Well, something like that. But I do have a request.” I stared her down. Her eyes met mine briefly, then slipped away again. Her hand twitched at her side, as if she wanted to reach for a weapon, and reflexively my knife appeared in my hand.

“Ah, first…can I…” She mumbled out the rest of her sentence. I leaned in a little, grip tightening around my knife, and her hand raised slowly as she pointed down toward it, finger twirling idly, almost cutely. “You wouldn’t mind if I borrowed that for a moment…?”

I flipped it in my hand and held it out, handle-first. …Wasn’t much she’d be able to do with it anyway. Not against me, and not against Nico.

What she did do was a little more disturbing, and she went on as she did it, like it wasn’t strange at all: she sliced her hand open, then held it over each of Nico’s plates in turn, letting her blood dribble out. Then she mixed it into the soup and the rice, and in with the seasoning on the burger.

“There’s something in Milady’s trophy room…a gift she’s been using for a while. …I think it’s…making her ill. Restless. I don’t typically believe in that, but since you’re a magical girl…and if I recall, one of the other, erm, Rabbits specializes in items with curses…?” She licked her hand idly once she was done, and handed my knife back off to me. …And for my part, I ran my tongue along the edge. …She was already dumping it in someone’s food. It wasn’t that big a deal.

“I was hoping you could take it with you. …Without Milady realizing. She really…isn’t well, anymore.”

We parted ways once we left the kitchen, a silver tray in her hands and my knife in mine. She pointed me to the trophy room – not much of a stretch, right next to Nico's – and told me she'd keep her lady busy. …Couldn't get an answer as to why she didn't have me do this while Nico was unconscious, but maybe she had to…I don't know. Make sure I wasn't going to go off the deep end over it. Or rat her out. God knows Nico does some dumb, irrational shit when she gets mad.

The trophy room was lined with weapons. Broken shields. Orphaned beam katanas, portraits of a hundred dead assassins. And actual portraits of a couple of them. A gladiator's memorabilia, like the fucking Batcave. …All Jade had told me about what I was looking for was that I'd know it the moment I set eyes on it.

…Pretty sure I did, too. Next to an old rubber tiger mask, the one she'd worn when she was first starting out as an assassin. A mask stand, with something…beautiful on it. A visor, almost shaped like a butterfly, its wings covering the eyes and a…tail sort of thing, a noseguard.. A glinting, black steel blindfold that barely seemed to contain its own brilliance. Cracks of luminous gold covered its surface, and seemed to light up the room all on their own.

…lesh of…len angels…

My body moved on its own. …I think. …I'm not…really sure. I wanted it. I wanted to touch it so badly. I wanted to wear it. …A voice itched at the back of my mind, an irresistible voice. The taste of Jade's blood lingered in my mouth, roaring into a deep, unquenchable thirst. I…might have started to drool, as I reached out to touch it. As my fingers brushed against cool, black metal, as they traced those golden lines. A mind-melting pleasure erupted from my neck, and from my wrists as the old, bad blood began to drain from my body through the vestiges of old scars, and my cheeks grew warm and wet as my vision turned red.

The flesh of the fallen angels.

…Every light in the penthouse blew out at once as I plucked the golden mask from its stand. It soothed the painful ache in my mind. Even holding it, I felt my senses sharpen. I knew immediately – Nico was holding this for me. This mask was made for me, and it felt… wonderful, to be reunited. Like I was missing a fragment of my soul.

I heard a noise from behind me. A heartbeat. The sound of muscles contracting. A voice, as someone rushed toward the room I was in. Someone saying my name.

A monster. It was a monster that pretended to be human. Pretended to be my friend. A dream. It was a dream. It was her. Her mouth was split unnaturally, drooling black ichor in a twisted smile. Her eyes were pools of the same, ripped open and bleeding. Ripped open years ago. I didn't finish, then. I couldn't finish then. I was missing this. Missing a part. Missing an important part.

It howled my name, and behind it, the shadow of a shadow of a person, Nakajima but not. One of the Nakajimas. One of the hundreds. It warbled something as the monster advanced on me, but it was slow, too slow. Both of them were. My knife wasn't.

It's just a dream. It isn't real.

The flesh of the fallen angels is a dream.

Just a dream.

It isn't real. Isn't real. Isn't real. Isn't real.

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/05/13(Sat)08:22 No.27582362

You pulled the trigger, and pulled it again. And again. And again. Until the magazine clicked empty, the heavy metallic snap petulant and craven, the gruesomely-oversized handcannon in your grasp begging to be reloaded.

It was only when the red haze from your vision finally cleared that you lowered the Golden Desert Eagle and examined your handiwork.

Lucius was already down, but something inside you wanted to make real sure she'd stay that way. As if you were afraid that something would turn her into some sort of monster once your back was turned, transforming the Magical Girl into a freaking zombie demon from outer space.

"Murderface, I..." Sayaka's voice crackles in your ear, horror and disgust warring in her voice. "I think she's dead already."

Not dead, you growl in reply. You approach the twitching, moaning, bullet-ridden corpse - everything from the waist down reduced to mere biological matter - and with a grunt, tear her Soul Gem from the collar around her neck. The glowing bauble coming away in your hand with a snap.

Not yet.

You feel your fingers curling around the egg-shaped jewel. Enough pressure and you could easily crush it in your grasp.

Right now, right here, with you covered in your own blood and bleeding in more than six different places, you can send a message.

[]Crush it.
[]Leave it alone for interrogation.

Then I'll hunt her down and bring her head to Lucius and let her see the futility of her efforts. I will make her feel how all of this was pointless and better avoided. You glance down at the Soul Gem in your hand, the crimson light weakly shining through your fingers made sticky with your own blood. You could crush it, right here, right now, in full view of the audience, of your principal - and all the other Warmasters who might be watching.

You spend a few moments in relative silence - hearing your own strained breath saw in and out of your pierced lungs, hearing your lacerated heart valiantly try to beat despite being all but torn in half -before slipping the crystallized essence of a Magical Girl's soul into your inventory. Deciding to save your judgment until after interrogation. Maybe, just maybe, you'll be able to keep your temper long enough to find out more about this fucking Prophet before you kill her.

You glare up at the audience, at the cameras focusing on you, at the huge flat screens currently displaying your own scowling face. Reaching up to self-consciously wipe the blood currently trickling down the corners of your chin with your sleeve, you pull the brim of your Warmaster Cap down - and slowly make your way off the field, one painful step at a time, as the crowd erupts in the loudest cheer they've ever made. The lights that had once illuminated the field dimming, then turning off completely as the rest of the spotlights focus on the stage, where your principal jubilantly strikes up another song, much more energetic and cheerful than the last. A...fitting victory theme, you guess.

Maybe idols aren't so bad after all.

It's here that you growl at Sayaka to have someone - anyone - collect the bodies while the field's dark and everyone's distracted. No need to shatter the fucking illusion that you've actually been killing real live Magical Girls rather than everything being some sort of elaborate live stage play.

He's small time.

If you want to torture someone bound in a gem, you find out the gem's cleavage (no, not that cleavage, the crystal's structure). If it's got specific lattices, you can then heat and cool the gem to temperatures where those lines of cleavage can be infiltrated with acidic dyes. If it is an amorphous structure (like glass), you can then use equalized pressure (and egg shapes are very good at withstanding equidistant pressure) and compress the actual crystal itself. Or you can superheat various metals and aerosolize them to coat the crystalline structure, which permanently bonds the metals to the gem.

If you REALLY hate this person, you take someone else's soul gem, and superheat it, and heat hers to a slightly lower tempurature. Then you gently grind off the superheated soul gem and let the still hot powder fall onto the target gem. This will destroy the first gem in slow pieces, but it will impregnate the second gem with the actual substance of the first gem. (This is how artificial rubies, sapphires and other corundum based gems are made.)

This presupposes the gems are not so fragile that these treatments won't utterly destroy them before the process is started.

You're relieved to hear from the young girl. Even if...well, technically, she doesn't have to worry about being alive anymore, she did get hurt saving your shit back there. And it did sound like Lucius managed to cut her a good one before you blasted her entire lower half to chunky strawberry jam.

You tell Yuu that yes, the both of you did win, thanks to her.

+ A-ah. I...I'm glad, Chiaki-san. + Despite obvious pain bleeding into her words, the pleased smile in her voice is unmistakable. + I...I'm glad I was useful to someone. T-to you, Chiaki-san. + She grunts a moment. + U-um. I'm...I'm sorry for letting you get hit, I got carried away a bit, a-and-- +

No, you cut her off. Nothing to apologize for. You're standing up and walking away from something that could easily have turned out a whole lot worse - and it did, at least for Lucius and her little group.

Well, you are bleeding a whole fucking lot, with three spears still sticking out of your back but - it's fine. You're not mad. In fact, you're a bit worried about her.

+ A-ah...? + Yuu squeaks her, before gasping. + I'm...I'll be fine, Chiaki-san. I'll...I'll just have to...sleep in the dark for a while. + She hesitates here, but forges on ahead a moment afterwards, seemingly fueled by a need to be honest. + It'll take some time for me to regenerate the damage, but...but I'll make sure it won't be too long before I can be useful to Chiaki-san again! +

Ah. Well. As long as she'll be alright, then.

+ I promise I will. + Yuu murmurs. + For Chiaki-san, I promise I will. +

...Heh. Cute kid. It's just a fucking shame she got mixed up in Pinky's bullshit.

Your vision swims here, along with the sudden taste of something horribly foul in your mouth. You turn to spit into the darkened pitch of the baseball diamond, not looking to see where the glob of blood ended up on. You didn't stop to hear the grass sizzle once the murky, clotted liquid splashed upon it.

...Jesus Christ, just how far is the dugout, anyway? It feels like you've been walking for miles, here.

+ A-ah, the Soul Gems from earlier...+ Yuu suddenly pipes up. + I placed them in your inventory, Chiaki-san. You should be able to get them there. +

Right. That's...that's convenient. Yuu's a good girl.

+ E-eh? B-but, Chiaki-san, I'm-- + Yuu gets cut off, here, as the ground underneath your feet gives a sudden lurch. "A-ah, watch out--!"

Oh. Wait. Shit. That wasn't the ground at all, that was your legs giving way.

You didn't hit the ground, though. Someone's...someone's helping you up back on your feet. One arm around your waist, underneath the spears, the other holding your own arm over her shoulders. Helping you stumble in the half-darkness afforded by the lack of light illuminating the diamond.

Even with the lack of lighting, you could tell that the person helping you's wearing a Miracle Midori costume. Green hair, red beret, the works. Just a shame, then, that you're ruining it by getting your own blood all over the outfit.

...Memories. She smells of memories. Long-forgotten ones, never meant to be remembered.

"Just a bit more, Murderface. Keep walking." Your unknown benefactor murmurs in a quiet, almost inaudible whisper. Her familiar voice ringing more bells in your increasingly-muddled mind - as if someone had thrown a choking, fuzzy sweater on your brain and had suddenly turned up the thermostat to make things extra itchy.

"...Fuck's sake, you really know how to put on a show, huh?"

...You should know this person. YOU SHOULD KNOW THIS PERSON.

WHO THE FUCK IS SHE.

How do you ask her who she is?

I'm currently working on adding Sayaka and have been stalled on this because she's turning out to be more difficult than I expected.

After Sayaka comes the other Rank Leaders, so Enishi, Rea and Yuma.

Once Yuma's added, I'll add in the other Oriko Magica girls. After that, round out the only other 9th member who's been mentioned by name, so Kumatora will be added.

After that, well, whatever catches my interest I guess. Either add the im@s girls or start working on the 8ths.

A very long term project, this.

Yeah, it's been stated that MGs age normally in this setting. Chiaki is a little bit taller than Homura was, for example, and all the other PMMM girls have gotten taller accordingly.

That aside, we're still technically older than everyone else because Pinky mentioned "being loyal for over a hundred years" so the timeloops are counting towards that number.

Finally, Chiaki is average height for a japanese girl. She just hangs out a lot with a girl who's above average height.

It is a bit different than the "eternally 15" like precure and possibly how Madoka handled things except everyone dies after about 2 months tops so we can't really say whether that happens or not

But it is still eternal youth in the you don't end up an old grey hag sense since none of the meguca have apparently ended up that way

"What are you--" The person helping you stagger across the darkened baseball diamond starts, before she immediately stiffens, a muffled yelp squeezing past suddenly-gritted teeth. "...You're...you're really something, you know that? Even at a time like this..."

You narrow your eyes as you begin squeezing experimentally. Once, twice.

...Soft. But not that soft. It's...hnn. You should know this person. No one has this kind of softness, not like any other.

It's like muscle memory, or something, pricking at your mind, like a splinter in your brain.

Very warm, though. Really warm.

You hear yourself murmuring a name, one you couldn't exactly hear with your heartbeat pounding in your ears. The person you're clinging to seems to freeze even more at this, before slowly relaxing. Continuing to help you hobble into the light.

You hear a grudging grunt of approval from her. "...Probably should be flattered you could tell, even with this kind of blood loss." Another moment, and she speaks again. "I shouldn't pull these out, you'll bleed out more. Have Mickey do it instead, she'll be able to plug you up easily."

...Hah. So you got it right, then? That's...that's awesome. You're awesome.

"Heh. Don't get too cocky." More voices, crackling with static, and you raise your head to see dark shapes swarming out of the dugout towards you. "...Looks like our time's up, though. Your backup's here--kkh! Murderface!"

But it's only been a few moments. Couldn't she stick around a couple more minutes, at least until the world stops fucking trying to spin you to death?

...Heh. Butt.

"...Can't." Even through the murky haze muddling up your mind, you can hear the note of regret in her voice. "Situation's too complicated to stick around. Soon, though." It's here that you feel her slowly slip away from you, but not after feeling a pair of soft, warm lips press against your cheek. "Sorry."

You growl something vaguely possessive here, your free hand reaching out to grab her again - but she slips out of your reach, stepping back out into the darkness. You see her shake her head, her green hair flowing in the stadium's wind.

"Bodyslide by one," You hear her murmur, and she disappears in a brief, sudden flash of light. The shock of it bringing you back around into consciousness some, clearing a bit of the cobwebs and allowing you to make the final few steps before nearly crashing into Kyosuke.

"Miss Matsuda, we're here." You hear the young man say, both his hands holding you up. You growl at the sudden, unfamiliar touch, and make to shove him away - but all you could manage is a weak struggling. He doesn't even seem to notice, instead talking now to his men. "Get the tangoes bagged up and sealed, right away. Let's not give the audience anything to photograph once the lights come up." He turns back to you. "Come on, Miss Matsuda. Easy does it. Miss Sayaka's on her way down, just please take a seat here."

Grudgingly, you allow him to help you onto a bench - one that you sit on sideways, to make room for the three solid heartwood spears still embedded in your back. You're thankful for the rest, at least, a moment to get off of your feet.

There's a moment of silence here as he gets a good look at you. "...Er. Does...does it hurt at all, Miss Matsuda?"

How do you respond?

You slouch forward, resting your elbows on your knees as you allow yourself to relax, forcing your body to unclench, muscle group by muscle group. It feels like you're still pumping adrenalin instead of blood, and as sluggish as you currently feel, your entire physiology is screaming at you to get up and...and shoot something, or someone. You don't know. But it's as if your body is rebelling against the very act of resting, of remaining idle, without a weapon in your hand.

It's here that Kyosuke's question finally seems to sink in, and you look up at him, scowling. Does it hurt at ALL? What the fuck does he think, then?

"...Ah, uh. Well. I've..." Kyosuke stammers here, trying to form a coherent sentence, before shaking his head and giving up. He bows his head in contrite, embarrassed apology. "...Sorry, Miss Matsuda. That was a stupid question."

Yeah. Yeah, it was. Now, is he going to stand there being awkward about it, or does he have any smokes he can share with you?

"Cigarettes?" Kyosuke echoes, as if hearing of the stuff for the first time - before blinking, and then nodding quickly. "Oh! Ah, yes, Miss Matsuda, I do have some." He takes out what looks like a silver rectangle from the depths of his freshly-pressed suit - the young man seems to have changed out of his stupid costume earlier - and he flicks it open with a thumb, revealing a carefully-arranged row of brown sticks. "No cigarettes, Miss Matsuda, but I do have cigarillos. Would these be okay?"

You consider it for a moment, before nodding. He holds out the case to you, and you take one, sticking it between your lips and biting gently at the filter to keep it steady. Kyosuke, to his credit, gets the hint soon enough, and with a flick of a lighter and a few puffs, you're already breathing soothing smoke into your punctured lungs.

...Hnh. Bit too rich for your taste, this. But it'll do.

"I'm here!" You hear Sayaka call, followed by her quick footsteps. "Enishi's guarding Ruri. Where's Murderf--" She stops herself in the middle of your name as she comes to a halt in front of you. "...Jesus Christ. You...you don't fuck around, do you, Murderface? And you walked all the way here with those sticking out of you, all by yourself?"

Nah, not really. You took them out earlier, and then stuck them back on for effect. Really catches the eye, doesn't it?

"What? I don't--" Sayaka begins, puzzled, before frowning. "Hah. Sorry, Murderface, couldn't catch you being sarcastic. Hard to tell when all you do is fucking mumble a lot." She crouches down in front of you just as you inhale, one hand reaching out towards your wounds - and it's here that she starts to cough. Fanning away with her other hand. "...Aw, for fuck's sake, Murderface! Blow your cancerous fumes somewhere else!"

But you're not really blowing the smoke toward her.

"Bullshit! You--" She stops again, blinking. "Oh. Sorry. It's your lungs. Bitch poked through 'em like drink packs." The blue-haired Eversor clucks her tongue. "Easy enough to fix, I guess. Just gotta get the spears out first." She straightens up and takes place behind you - and you feel her take hold of one. "I'd say this won't hurt a bit, but no, it's going to hurt like a motherfucker." A moment. "You gonna be alright there, Murderface, or you need something?"

You shake your head at this, before flashing her a thumbs up over your shouhlder. Pain isn't something you're concerned with at the moment, at least.

"Yeah? Okay." And without preamble - without so much as a warning - Sayak all but tears the first spear out of you. It's a curious sensation, one prefaced by a liquid crunching sound as the spear's piercing blade is forcefully withdrawn from your chest. And it did hurt - a lancing pain that took what little of your breath you could actually pull in and hold - but it's not anything new, as far as you're concerned. Nothing exciting.

There's a loud clatter as Sayaka lets the spear fall on the floor, and you feel her grip the second. "Oh, yeah. I went ahead and called up Kyuubey for a wagon. For the suicide girls, earlier. En route any minute - thought we should just get 'em hauled to a Silent Room before they start getting any bright ideas."

Yeah? Well. That's...convenient.

You let out a hiss as she rips the second spear free, and in the corner of your eye you see Kyosuke averting his eyes quickly here, looking quite pale and green. He turns around, finally, his back to you both as he quickly talks into his headset.

"Figured you'd say so. Not enough room to interrogate them here, anyway. Much safer for them and us if they're back in HQ, too." The second spear is disposed of the same way as the first, and you brace yourself for the removal of the third.

It doesn't come, though, and you hazard a glance over your shoulder to look at Sayaka, to ask her what's up.

Only to find her looking back at you strangely.

You ask her about this, and she blinks, before shaking her head.

"Huh? Oh...no, nothing." She lets out a breath. "Well, actually, there is. You know my opinion of you, Murderface. I think you fight like shit, and no halfway competent Warmaster would let herself get fucked up to this extent." Sayaka waggles the spear a bit in place, making you wince. "But, uh. I...I kinda saw how you saved Kasuga back there. That's...well, you know."

No, you don't. What was it?

Again. Like you're an actual human being, rather than...yourself. Or a typical Warmaster." She shakes her head. "I wasn't expecting it at all. So...yeah." She lets the clatter of the spear on the floor an awkward punctuation mark on this conversation. "Now shut up while I fucking heal your shit."

Heh. Right. Whatever she says, then.

[[+100 Sayaka Points!]

...Wait. Did she say...you walked across the field by yourself?

"Yeah?" Sayaka pipes up from behind you, both her hands on your puncture wounds. "I said you walked across the field by yourself, with all this shit sticking out of you."

...She didn't see anyone else with you?

"...No? You were the only one left standing there, Murderface. Didn't see anyone else." Sayaka grunts. "Squad Hiryu didn't report anything, either. Why?"

How do you react?

PROSE MAGICA

One thousand five hundred feet above the ground, two girls stared out over the city. Green and red lights draped the buildings, tall blocks of glass and concrete crowned with a coating of frost. The two of them gazed without a sound; the silence spoke every word they would need. Cars zipped by as the lights danced in the night for the girls, reflecting in their twin pairs of eyes.

The first was tall and wore a black baseball cap atop flowing golden blonde hair. She was graceful and elegant, her face beautiful and her body womanly. She wore a black winter coat and a pair of scuffed denim jeans - a care-free contrast to the air that surrounded her.

Her arm was wrapped around the shoulders of a much younger girl; the top of her white-haired head didn't even reach the blonde's shoulders. Her bright eyes, the colour of the winter sky, twinkled as the city lights reflected off of them, darting back and forth as different pin pricks of brightness caught her attention. In her hand was a brand new notepad, clutched tightly to her chest as if she feared it would somehow fall through the window before her and disappear into the streets.

"Odette," the blonde started, moving her hand up to ruffle the shorter girl's hair before she came to rest her cheek against the silvery mess, "what is a legend?"

Odette's eyes shifted up as she didn't dare move her head. "My lady?"

"A legend," the blonde repeated, gesturing with her free hand for emphasis. "We are immortal. We fight monsters no god would dare to dream, and we are forgotten. Our songs unsung, our stories untold. We live, we die, we fight like heroes and the world is none the wiser. Sounds to me like the stuff of legends and yet," a near-silent hint of a sigh wisped through her lips, "here we are."

Odette remained silent as she slowly turned her head up to face the Warmaster. The city lights reflected off of the blonde's somber eyes, a melancholic smile curling her lips ever so slightly. Odette had found her in such moods with increasing frequency in the past weeks. At first, she was worried that the Warmaster was finally beginning to succumb to the strains of office, but it had slowly begun to seem like something far more - something Odette had no hope of placing with all of four years of experience.

"I've been doing this job for a very," the Warmaster hesitated and hugged the shorter girl more even tightly, "very long time. I can't even remember the first witch I fought, but I'm sure that we must have been friends. And then I kept fighting and the people around me kept dying. First a few, then dozens, then hundreds.” She paused again, her eyes sinking to floor. “I'm sure I've seen at least a thousand magical girls die around me and I remember so precious few of them."

It scared Odette. It scared her to hear her mentor say such things; her mentor, who was a bastion of positivity and enthusiasm every day, no matter what misfortune befell her. It was a rare day when the blonde even spoke about her past at all, never mind act so reminiscent. To Odette, her teacher had never looked so old as she did that night.

"I'm tired, Odette," the Warmaster murmured, almost as if she didn't want the silver-haired girl to hear it. "I think," she hesitated, as though reconsidering her words for a brief moment before continuing, "I think our next witch hunt shall be my last."

"You're going to retire?" The question seemed as if it should have been obvious and yet, somehow it wasn't.

The blonde's body shook against Odette's as she laughed quietly. "Something like that."

Is there a Russian Officio? Are they focussed on R&D? Is the Warmaster a certain hell-raven and does she get on well with Kharn?

>> ☐ Prose Magica: The Ballad of the Seventeenth Part 13 archivalfag 10/05/13(Sat)13:35 No.27585895

"But what about the Officio?" The shorter girl's question sounded far more pleading than she intended. "What- What's going to happen if you leave?"

"You'll manage," the Warmaster's care-free response did nothing to ease Odette's mind. "Why do you think I made you Warmaster-in-training, hm? Did you think I would always be Warmaster?"

"Of- Of course not, but..." Of course she did. Odette couldn't imagine a world without the woman who had practically raised her. Being Warmaster-in-training... That was a contingency plan. A 'just-in-case' that would end up necessary. At least, that was what she had always told herself.

"You'll do a fine job," the blonde assured her, rubbing her cheek into Odette's long, silver hair. "Someday you'll become the hero I never could be. 'The Winter Warmaster' they'll call you." The Warmaster ran her hand through the shorter girl's hair again as she lifted her face. "I'm sure of it."

Odette looked up at the lights twinkling in the blonde's big, blue eyes. She saw a girl who could have been no more than twenty. She saw an old woman who was several times that age. But more than anything else, she saw someone who had seen a lifetime of grief and anguish and had finally, at long last, had enough.

Her name was Brie Eldridge, First among the Seventeenth.

Five days later, on a cold winter morning, she taught Odette what it meant to become a legend.

After nine days, Odette remembered. Her body was battered and broken; the golden hook still pierced her chest just below her left shoulder, hanging her as if she were little more than a piece of meat in a butcher shop. Her eyepatch was adhered to her face with dried blood that trickled down from her scalp. The wound in her chest had long since faded into a dull ache that stung every time the wind picked up and tore it open anew. The once white and platinum costume that she still wore was dirtied and caked with blood from the cuts and bruises that decorated her body.

Odette's mind slowly churned to life like a car starting for the first time in months. Memories of the past several days trickled in as her body began to respond to her commands once more. Her fingers and toes cracked and twitched as new life flowed into them at long last. The girl wheezed as her lungs pulled in the first breath of air they'd felt in days, the taste of fresh, cold air washing over her tongue as life was quite literally breathed into her. For the first time in years, Odette felt cold.

But the cold belonged to her.

With a shallow breath, the fingers of her right hand arched. That hand balled up into a fist. Every muscle in her body tensed for a brief moment.

Then she felt it.

The feeling spread from her chest, down her arms and legs, up to her head then out to her fingers, her toes and her ears. It wasn't quite warmth - that was a feeling she would have to reluctantly go without for the time being - it was more a simple absence of cold. That would be enough to keep her moving.

Odette's mind turned over once more as she regained feeling. A rough groan escaped her lungs as they continued to work; forced, painful breaths slowly easing out until they almost stopped hurting. Thoughts began to pour in as more than simple pictures and images. Words formed. Ideas. Passions. Regrets. Everything flooded in at once as if a dam had finally cracked and burst within her head.

Three years ago, she had brought the Seventeenth Officio back from the brink of annihilation with her own two hands. When half of the Officio had deserted and another tenth witched out from grief, it was by Odette's word that the remnants had held the line. It was by her hand alone that Brie's legacy lived on.

And it was by her hand that it had slipped away and crumbled before her eyes.

By her hand that the Seventeenth had become one of the weakest of the Twenty.

"Every girl who wants a cake", as the Bartender had put it - though not without her own colourfully-worded spin. That was what the Seventeenth's policy had become following Brie's demise. A proud bastion of strength turned to a laughingstock before Odette's eyes. For the first time in years, she saw what she had become. She was a perfect mirror of the masses that once followed her. Proud and awe-inspiring for a time... Before everything slid away. After Miranda's death, Odette had become little more than a dog off its chain - snapping and picking fights at every opportunity while her Officio deteriorated around her.

An Officio of legends turned to nothing under her command.

She would have said something if she could; something witty or poignant as she always used to. There was a time where she was known for her charisma and gravitas. Now, however, her chest was too weak and her throat was aching and dry. Instead, anything she might have had to say came out as a cough that shook her body and ripped the stuck flesh away from the golden hook.

It was only by harnessing the sensation of that pain that she managed to pry open her single eye at long last. Surprisingly, it didn't take long at all for her lone pupil to adjust after being closed for days. The world around her was painted in shades of black and grey by the yellowing moon that hung overhead. It wasn't quite at its peak - that would have meant something to her if she was in any condition to think about it.

Crickets sang, playing their own distant fanfare for Odette's reawakening. She was in a forest, she could tell that much. She had been hung from a tree at the edge of a clearing, at the very center of which she could make out an illuminated box. The more she squinted, the more lines began to form as the shapes around her became distinguished. The contours and shadows of the box slowly came into focus, proving to be a wooden cabin with lamp left on porch - the light barely reaching across the clearing. Every now and again, Odette could make out signs of movement through the windows.

With a second flex of her hand, she felt the wind begin to pick up as cold, crisp air flowed between spread fingers. Odette's hanging body swayed in the breeze, cradled as though the wind were a mother rocking her child to sleep. It whistled between the branches and trees, singing a shrill lullaby for the child of the cold. With her one hand, she motioned once more, calling to the northerly and bidding it play her a symphony.

As she felt the first snowflake touch and melt upon her nose, a smile crept up Odette's battered and bloodied face. Her hand clenched into a fist; the windy canon ceased.

Fennel Vance stepped up to Odette, craning her messy-haired head from side to side as she stared up at the hanging girl. One hand idly spun one end of the golden hook while the other hand tugged lightly on the chain, making the one-eyed girl bob up and down lifelessly.

"Odette," the Wolf muttered, giving the chain a stronger tug.

No response.

"Odeeeette," Fennel drawled, tapping her foot anxiously. "Shit, if you die on me I'm gonna be in a shit load of trou-"

"Water."

The word came out as a wheeze through a burning throat. It was as much a demand as it was a plea. Fennel nodded, tilting her head from side to side as she did. "Water, huh?" She said, a bemused grin appearing on her face. "Y'know what? As a reward for bein' such a trooper, you got it! I'll be right back, you hang tight."

Odette tried tell the other girl to go fuck herself. Instead, it seared her aching throat and came out as a long bout of coughing - a bout of coughing that then rocked the hook sticking out of her shoulder and made her bite her lip almost hard enough to draw blood. She stared down the other girl as she skipped off to the cabin, lip quivering and twitching in a mixture of pain and fury.

The silver-haired girl didn't know exactly how long it took Fennel to return with that blessed bottle of water. Something told her that she must have slipped out of consciousness some time during the wait. A heavy clinking sounded as she felt her body slowly drop toward the ground, prompting her to open a heavy-lidded eye. Just as she felt the tips of her toes brush the ground, a bottle of water was unceremoniously jammed into her mouth and tilted up. She coughed and sputtered at the sudden sensation before Fennel yanked the bottle away.

"Hah!" She barked, shaking the chain still clutched in her other hand, adding a high-pitched echo as it jangled "Oh man! You should see your face right now! Okay, okay, that was mean. For real this time."

>> ☐ Prose Magica: The Ballad of the Seventeenth Part 13 archivalfag 10/05/13(Sat)13:41 No.27585991

The second time, Fennel allowed Odette to place her lips around the mouth of the bottle and lifted gently, allowing the suspended girl to drink properly. It wasn't until the bottle was empty that the Wolf pulled it away, smiling wickedly at her captive.

"So whatcha say?" She asked. "Ready to throw up your arms and praise the Blessed Lady? Or whatever you want to do, really. Up to you. I ain't gonna tell you how to be one of Her champions. Not like it's m-"

Fennel halted her musings and cocked an eyebrow at Odette. Her body seemed to be spasming with growing intensity and it took the messy-haired girl a few moments to realize that she was, in fact, laughing.

"The fuck are you havin' a chuckle abo-"

And that's when Odette did it. With a sudden exhale, she spat. Funny as it was, it was the only thing she could think of. She'd managed to force herself only to drink as much as was absolutely necessary. The water seemed to distort and twist in mid-air, shimmering unnaturally as it flew. Fennel barely had time for the event to register in her mind. She let out a horrid screech and dropped to her knees as the glistening mass struck her face. The golden chain hit the ground as both hands raced to clutch and claw at the site of the impact.

"MY EYE," Fennel wailed, her voice cracking as she screamed. "IT'S IN MY FUCKIN' EYE!"

Odette's body collided with the ground, no longer held aloft by the hook impaling her chest. The other girl's gaze twisted up at her. She glared with a single blackened eye, a jagged shard of ice jutting from the other. Her snarling face was decorated with dozens of cuts and slices from smaller shards that ran the gamut from those no bigger than paper cuts to a ragged gash slicing open one side of her mouth.

"You bitch!" Fennel snarled, wiping the blood from her cheek on one sleeve as she picked up her golden chain once more. "You FUCKING BITCH!"

>> ☐ Prose Magica: The Ballad of the Seventeenth Part 13 archivalfag 10/05/13(Sat)13:42 No.27586015

Odette had only just finished dusting her self off when she felt the other girl yank her closer. She stumbled and nearly tripped as the chain was reeled in, finally stopping when she was nearly face to face with the Wolf. Yet, still she continued to laugh and giggle as if there was some unspoken joke that Fennel simply wasn't getting.

It wasn't until she had already opened her mouth to speak that the messy-haired girl finally understood. Her one remaining eye widened in a mixture of confusion and fear as the first snowflake came to rest on Odette's shoulder. In seconds, one snowflake turned to dozens, dozens turned to hundreds and hundreds became a blizzard.

Fennel's hand shot out toward Odette's throat, then passed right through it as though the smaller girl didn't even exist. The Wolf's face contorted in rage while her target flashed a wicked grin - one that mimicked her own frequent expression - as her body seemed to fade into the snowstorm. In moments, Odette was gone; only dancing snow marked the place where she once stood.

"I have to hand it to you," the one-eyed girl called out, her voice carried on the wind, "you really gave me some time to think. I needed that."

Fennel's head turned around at a speed that made Odette wonder how she didn't snap her own neck. There the Winter Warmaster stood in the middle of clearing, her face still bloodied but her costume fresh and clean. The hole in her chest was iced over, providing a much-needed numbing cold. Her figure seemed to shimmer and shift as the snow passed between them, her features changing subtly. One moment her hair was short as it had been for years, the next it was down to her waist. Fennel could even swear that for a brief second she wore a black baseball cap - the same that had been past down from her predecessor.

>> ☐ Prose Magica: The Ballad of the Seventeenth Part 13 archivalfag 10/05/13(Sat)13:43 No.27586033

"Come on then," Odette beckoned, cracking her knuckles. Her voice seemed to speak as two; one whispering quietly through the air, the other a howling, raging gale. "Show me what this Blessed Lady's chosen are made of!"

That was all the reason Fennel needed to charge. Her feet fell through an inch of snow as she rushed her opponent, a hook clutched in either hand. Her anger, however, blinded her. She never stopped to think why her opponent had stopped to call out to her. She didn't question why Odette seemed to do so while appearing entirely unarmed.

As the first golden blow struck her, the silver-haired girl burst like a bubble into a million twirling snowflakes. A split-second later, her shin slammed into Fennel's ribcage with an audible crack.

The former Warmaster felt exhilarated as fresh adrenaline pumped through her veins. She had realized her biggest mistake in her last engagement. Her spears forced her to fight at mid-range, exactly where the Wolf was strongest. She had to get close - get right up in her opponents face - in order to nullify Fennel's advantage. So she decided on the simplest path. She wouldn't use her spears at all.

Fennel's spine twisted as she brought one hook around in a downswing. Odette, however, was faster. One hand caught the Wolf's wrist while she brought her heel down on the girl's foot. She wasn't in any mood to fight honourably.

A moment too late, Odette noticed the chain coiling around her foot. Fennel yanked hard, bringing the silver-haired girl to the ground. She had no choice but to roll away as hook after hook struck the ground. The chain went taut as she reached her limit. Suddenly remembering something a fellow Warmaster had taught her during one particular sparring match, she shoved herself off the ground with one arm and swung her leg around in a wide arc. The chain tangled in Fennel's legs and swept her off her feet while Odette pulled herself up and delivered a violent stomp to the other girl's right elbow.

>> ☐ Prose Magica: The Ballad of the Seventeenth Part 13 archivalfag 10/05/13(Sat)13:45 No.27586053

Fennel swore as she pulled herself up - only to find that Odette had disappeared yet again. She squinted into the storm with her one remaining eye as she listened for footsteps. It was as if she had fallen into an entirely new world. The trees, her cabin, everything seemed to have disappeared into the blizzard.

Every so often, Fennel swore she could see movement. Figures moved in the snow, distant enough that she couldn't quite make out their features. A chill crept up her spine as she realized with a silent horror that the pair weren't alone in the storm.

It was then that Odette reappeared. Her quick footsteps crunched through two inches of snow. Fennel barely had time to dodge a spear aimed at her knee, moving so that it instead sliced an inch deep cut in her thigh. Her hook pierced the bottom of the former Warmaster's black cloak, catching her as she tried to run past.

As the chain jerked and tore at her cloak, Odette did the one thing that no opponent ever seemed to see coming - she threw a snowball. It hit the side of Fennel's face with a satisfying "whump" and the girl howled in pain once more.

"THAT HAD ICE IN IT," she screeched, clawing at near-invisible pins of ice that dotted her cheek. "WHAT IS WITH YOU AND THRO-"

Odette took the opportunity to knock the air out of Fennel's lungs with a firm blow to the gut. The Wolf doubled back, swinging her chains in a wide arc as rage and frustration overtook her. Her other arm hung limp as her vision went red. The silver-haired girl had managed to throw her in a blind fury, and with that, the fight was already over.

The former Warmaster disappeared into the snow again as one hook soared through the air where she once stood. The next second, she was behind Fennel. Odette seized her opponent by back of her collar and took another handful of fabric, then HEAVED. The Blessed Lady's chosen blinked as it dawned on her that she was suddenly soaring through the air. Another moment later, she crashed head-first through the window of her cabin and collided with the floor while the golden chain clattered and slid to the other side of the room.

The one-eyed girl stepped through the broken window, shards of glass crackling under foot as she slowly strode over to her opponent. Fennel tried desperately to crawl over to her weapon, her one good hand out-stretched toward it, grasping in vain. That was, until a silver-headed spear nailed her hand to the floor.

"Shit," Fennel muttered. With one hand impaled and the other arm broken at the elbow, she knew when she was beaten.

Odette slumped down into a nearby armchair and breathed a heavy sigh of relief. She reached behind herself and pulled that old pack of cherry-flavoured cigarettes out of her cloak, along with a lighter. She lit one clumsily - the second one of her life - then took a long drag on it, coughing and sputtering as the smoke entered her lungs.

"Didn't know y'smoked," the grounded girl observed, still pinned on her stomach.

"I don't."

For a while, I didn't really know why I went. Never been much of a music person. Heard more than enough shitty J-pop in my life just living with…the High Priestess and Nakajima. It was spur of the moment, and it cost me a lot to get a ticket at the last minute. …I guess I knew she'd be there. I mean, I knew she'd be there, but…

…Heh. Maybe I just wanted to be Miracle Midori for a while. Never did dress up like this on my own. Guess I grew on me after the millionth time. Miracle Midori for her Murder Mayumi. Not like we'd see each other. Not like she'd even be on stage, I figured. Sure, they were teasing her getting up there and singing on the stream the day before, but there’s no way they’d get her to do it.

...That’s another Murder Mayumi, right? That Midori idol slut is just tongue-fucking somebody else’s throat, right? I gripped the edge of my seat. Dug my nails in hard enough to hurt a little.

…Yeah. …Yeah, it had to be someone else. She wouldn’t…She doesn’t sound like that. And she wouldn’t learn the routine. Couldn’t picture Murderface ever dancing without punctuating it with gunfire. It had to be someone else. …Maybe I’d drag it out of that idol bitch later. It’d only take a few minutes. She wasn’t…No. Dammit. No. Miss Tomoe’d be up my ass if she found out I was even in the country. Fucking with superstars was a quick way to get the wrong kind of attention.

The girl next to me made some weird noise, like a cat getting oral sex for the first time. …Must have been a fan. She was recording the whole thing. Probably planned on taking it home and playing with herself.

…She caught me looking at her. Red eyes. Kind of pretty. Too bad nobody probably ever looked at them, the way she was built. Didn’t see many Japanese girls take puberty to the chest like a bullet train, and when she’d mutter to herself, she had a really weird accent. Probably another foreigner.

A few songs in the set came and went before something in the stadium changed. A buzzing, gnawing feeling that made my heart race, that made every hair stand on end. The stadium smelled like the sweat of ten thousand lonely girls just a second ago, with a hint of whatever the hell they sell at Japanese ballparks. …Now it had an undercurrent of blood, like the smell of rain before a big, ugly storm.

‘Waltz of the Spider Lilies’. …A song for a final parting. If something was going to happen…

Yeah. There she is, walking out onto the field like she owns it. And on the other side…

Some bitch with a stupid sword. Why does anyone think those are a good idea? I couldn’t make out what they were saying, but I could tell from here she was the kind of person to talk way too fucking much. Like picking a fight with the High Priestess. She struck me as familiar, somehow. Think one of acolytes mentioned somebody with a big, stupid sword and all the trappings of a smug, self-righteous dickbag.

I could only guess she was lecturing Kong…lecturing Warmaster Matsuda about her sins. …There was a tiny glint in the air as she threw…something, and my heart skipped a beat. She’d moved, skipped into a different position, but...did something kick her out of it? She didn’t even dodge. Didn’t fill what’s-her-sword’s tits up with lead while she was out. …Fuck.

She’s a Vindicare. FUCK. She could handle herself in a fight, sure, but…I watched her dance around the field, barely avoiding a big fuckoff sword that’d split her in half even on a glancing blow, and I had to stop myself from moving. From going to help her. …She was the Shieldmaiden. The Blessed Lady wouldn’t abandon her. She was supposed to be the Chosen that stood above the rest. She couldn’t die. She couldn’t.

The piranhas-in-the-air feeling coalesced all at once. It seemed to flow toward the Warmaster all at once as her…body changed.

…It was an ability that felt familiar, as she claimed the Flesh of the Fallen Angels. A weapon I thought I'd seen before. The idol – Kirishima, I guess – yelled something out on stage, and the crowd lit up with screams and cheers.

The girl next to me started meowing or something. …It was kind of contagious. I caught myself screaming for Murderface to…to fuck her in half.

Heh.

…Wish I knew where the hell Murderface learned to fight like that, though. It was brutal. It was amazing, it was like…I don't even know. God, she's beautiful when she works. …Dammit. …Goddammit.

"HEATHEN! HERETIC!" …Yeah, that was about what I expected. I could barely hear it through the noise of the concert, but she was screeching out exactly what I figured I'd hear since she first showed up. Threw a big fucking tantrum, right then and there, and called in her own little bitch patrol. …Heh. Three for the price of one, right, Kong?

…She would have laughed. She would have agreed. Guess she did, because it was like she heard me. Tore into them like they were eyefucking Miss Tomoe. The way she moved reminded me of somebody I bumped into once. An Honorary Rabbit, at the end of it. Seventh girl, nice kid. Dragonpunch, that's what she went by. Or that's what the High Priestess called her. Shit. What was her name-

Wait, those things have –guns-? The fuck do they have guns? They anti-materiel, too? Is every single one of those golden weapons a gun somehow? …Not all that proud to admit it, but that's kind of awesome. It was like something Nakajima would make up. Giant robot fists with guns in the fingers.

It went south in a hurry, and that's when I moved. ...She'd be fine. This was…well, this kind of shit was what the High Priestess…what Alice thrived on. Running you through just meant they stayed in fucking-up range. I slipped away from the crowd, past the other girls in the seats. Security was light – seemed like they were all worried about something else. Probably had something to do with Swordbitch and her imminent demise.

Just in time. The stadium lights went out, and I was just in time to pick up the pieces. She didn't even notice as I sidled up beside her, and it took a second even as I caught her.

…Blood and cigarettes. She smelled like blood and cigarettes. Not liquor, kind of unexpected. …Heh. Didn't know what to do. Just…walk her out. Pretend it's nothing, I figured. Probably wouldn't even notice.

…Then she grabbed my ass.

-Is everything alright, Wendy?- Dorothy chirped as I reassembled in my shitty hotel room. I forced out a response, my body collapsing on the bed behind me. My body felt like tingling lead. I hate teleporting. I really do. The whole place was pitch black compared to the stadium, aside from a little light on the phone and the glow of the hallway creeping in under the door. Managed to crawl over to the lamp after a few seconds and tug the chain, but it only helped so much.

My bed was lit up. A spotlight in a sea of black, a small bastion of safety in a checker-tile world. The glow from the hallway was gone. …Maybe the hallway was gone, too. Not like I could tell. I stared up at the ceiling as old whispers filled my mind.

Are you afraid of me?

…A voice from the corner. A figure approaching from the darkness, a glint of light off of red-framed glasses. A blurred form in white and faded purple-gray, a blot of uncertainty in the universe. Her eyes were sunless holes that seemed to suck me in, and her face didn't budge from its eternal scowl.

I thought you loved me.

It crawled up onto the bed, and the mattress tilted down a little to accommodate. Closer and closer it came, leaving divots in the sheets.

Why did you leave?

It crawled over me, on top of me. I could feel her cold hand on mine, I could smell blood, and cigarettes, and whiskey and maple syrup as her face drew close to mine, the gaping holes behind her glasses swallowing my vision.

…Get a grip, Cooldown. It isn't real. It isn't real. It isn't real. It isn't real…

Hahaha! Well, her duties to the Church outweigh her duties as an officer in some respects, so it's hard to say.

Her official rank is Callidus, but she's part of the Eighth's special ops division, and carries the honorary title of Callidus Prima. She and the Springfield Sisters were all aides to Warmaster Marigold, and she was promoted in no way when the leadership changed. She'd probably say she's basically the Equerry but without the raise, given the Sisters more or less act as one unit.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/06/13(Sun)08:01 No.27601345

You grit your teeth against the sensation of your body being brute-forced to heal itself, a raking-over-hot-coals kind of pain that cored right into the heart and never stopped digging. But even the pain couldn't derail your thought process - that being, the person who helped you across the field wasn't seen by anyone. Not by Sayaka, not by your Vindicare Squad giving you overwatch.

...So she's that good a Callidus, huh? Better even than Enishi herself, who's the highest-ranking Callidus in your Officio?

You lift up a bloodied hand to your face, and absent-mindedly flex your blood-caked fingers. Trying to remember the particular degree of softness and warmth that they've been squeezing handfuls of moments before.

Soft. Like the softest sofa at the soft sofa store.

"Well?" Sayaka's voice, forever edged by the ghost of impatience and a really bad temper mere inches away from exploding, snaps you back to the present. "You were saying, Murderface? Did you see anyone else with you back on that field, or what?"

Huh? Oh. ...No, you tell her. It was probably just a hallucination, or something. Blood loss and all. You're still feeling a bit light-headed yourself, in fact.

"Yeah?" The Blueberry behind you sounds suspicious, and you unconsciously brace for the sudden stab of a combat knife being shoved into your kidneys. Surprisingly, it doesn't come. "Well, just take it easy for a bit. You'll probably recover in ten, maybe twenty minutes, judging from how much you've lost."

...Sure. You'll do your best.

The Eversor grunts at your reply, but doesn't say anything else. A few moments later, and you feel the pain suddenly disappear, as if someone had flipped a switch inside you.

"Right, those are done." Sayaka gives your freshly-healed back a hearty, stinging slap, and you immediately flinch away at the impact, a hiss escaping from between your teeth. "That hurt? Good. It should. Pain's a good sign, means I managed to regenerate the nerves and shit right, too. Now turn a bit so I can get at the ones at your side."

You do so, and grunt as the pain brought from the healing flares up anew, in a different location. You puff just a bit more on the cigarillo you bummed off of Kyosuke, making sure to blow the smoke away from your impromptu medic.

"...Jesus Christ, Murderface. All your ribs are fucked on this side. Three of them actually punched into your lung here. Must have been one hell of a punch." You hear Sayaka click her tongue in disapproval. "Still..an Eversor fresh outta training could've blocked that. Easily."

Yeah, well, maybe she missed the fact that you're not exactly a crazy, pigsticker-wielding nutcase like her--

Also, spectacularly dangerous. If she's a happy drunk, that's one thing. But she was depressed before we 'met' her. and a suicidally depressed Yuu might drag sections of the entire continuum down with her.

...Yeah. Sure. Why not? While you're not exactly looking forward to subjecting yourself to the kind of sadistic training Eversors go through - your brief, half-remembered taste of it with Kharn back at Siberia never failed to make you wince - but if it helps prevent you from making a mess of your costume and needing to be patched up after every encounter, then so be it.

Of course, it does kind of sound like she's trying to get a stab at you herself. You remark this as the blue-haired impromptu medic finishes the wounds on your side, before moving to the one at your front.

"Aw, fuck you, Murderface." Sayaka stops healing you just enough to punch you in the arm. "Dammit, I'm trying to be helpful here! I mean, yeah, you did look awesome with those huge robot fists earlier, but hobbling off the battlefield looking like this?" She pinches a handful of your costume and pulls, stretching the material soaked through with already-browning blood. "Look at this, it's like that girl in that movie where she gets pig blood dumped all over her during the prom. It's not hardcore at all, it's humiliating. Our Warmaster getting bloodied by three no-name Eversors is humiliating."

...What about Kharn? You're pretty sure she was seen covered in blood before.

"Yeah, but that's never her blood in most cases. Plus she wears black, so it's not as obvious if she got cut up or what." Sayaka seems oblivious to the fact that she's getting her own idol costume - the cream-colored, bridal gown-like costume you've seen her practice in - stained with your own blood as well.

"And do you remember how she always looked like covered in blood? Happy as a pig rolling in shit. You on the other hand always look like someone filled your heels WITH shit, and someone told you that you'd have to climb up Shit Mountain wearing them."

Alright, alright. You get it.

...Wait. Did she say you looked awesome?

"Don't get cocky." Sayaka snaps at you. "Yeah, it was pretty badass with the gunfingers and everything, but you let yourself get exposed a whole lot. You don't capitalize when you got them down for the count, you overextend..." She shakes her head, before gesturing at your side for emphasis. "That's why they managed to get those hits, because you were just begging for 'em. Including this one, and this is pretty much up front." She pokes your healed but still tender stomach, and you barely manage to force a moan of pain into a grunt. "So yeah, put in the hours. We need a Warmaster who can take care of herself."

Arlright already. You did say you'll put the hours in when you can.

"Yeah, sure." Sayaka smirks now, straightening up before sitting back down on the bench beside you. "I'll tell Mami-san too, so she can block it off on your schedule. That way, you can't say you forgot about it, or something."

Right. And Sayaka'll be training you, then?

"Who else? Kyouko?" The Blueberry frowns, here. "She'll just be too easy on you. I know how the two of you can all be buddy-buddy together, and while there's nothing wrong with that, it's gonna get her killed one day."

...And you, too, right? It's going to get you killed, too?

"Eh? Oh, yeah, of course." Sayaka nods. "But I don't give a shit about you, anyway, so it's not worth mentioning--OW, FUCK! THAT HURT, ASSHOLE!"

That hurt, 'Warmaster', you remind her, withdrawing your fist from her side.

You glare at each other for a few moments, before Sayaka breaks it with a quiet chuckle. You join in afterward, and the both of you let the muffled sound of the concert fill in the rest of the silence.

At the tell-tale break in the music that marked the end of a song - one followed by a rumble of applause - it's then that you ask about the suicide girls. How are they, anyway? You weren't listening too closely on the comms, earlier.

"Tied up, unconscious, and guarded on gunpoint." Sayaka leans back, pulling off her blood-reddened gloves. "Karasawa gave Kyosuke's guys some of her own tranquilizers. Stuff designed to knock Magical Girls out, that kind of thing. She says it's her own recipe." The Blueberry shakes her head at this. "Gotta admit, if it weren't for the meatheads, taking them out would've taken much longer. I think we were pretty lucky that they weren't expecting that kind of security." She pauses, here, as if remembering something. "Oh, and we made sure to have their Soul Gems taken off of 'em, too, just in case any of them woke up and had the stupid idea to try and escape."

Huh. Well. That sounds pretty efficient. How'd she know they weren't expecting Kyosuke's men?

Sayaka turns to look at you as if you've just admitted that you're the basest breed of idiot. "Hello? Murderface, anybody home?" She raps her knuckles on your forehead. "They clearly didn't know how to react after getting choked and tranq'd from behind! Any Officio-trained Magical Girl would've let their training get 'em out of the chokehold and escape before the tranquilizertooko hold. I'm sure these girls are, too, but they probably were thinking too much about blowing themselves up to remember their training."

...Yeah. That's...that makes sense.

"Of course it does, idiot." Sayaka grumbles, shaking her head.

It's here that your smartphone suddenly vibrates in your inventory, loud enough for the Eversor beside you to hear.

"Get it. It's probably Kyoko, or something." The Blueberry lets out an exhausted-sounding sigh. "I'll just catch my breath for a while. Healing that kind of stuff kind of takes the wind out of me."

You excuse yourself with a murmured apology, one that Sayaka waves off, and you answer the call - holding up the device to your ear. This gets you, predictably, an earful of excited yelling from the other end.

You tell Kyoko - after she'd finished shouting her head off - that you didn't really get much from your brief training with Kharn. Well, besides learning how to be beaten up like a chump, and that being slapped with a clawed skeletal hand made out of really hard metal shit hurts like a bitch.

"Hahaha! Well, that's pretty much the first thing you learn from her, anyway!" Kyoko seems to finally remember that telephone voices were actually a thing, and manages to talk in a volume that doesn't involve shouting into the mouthpiece. "Oh, you were using one of those crazy golden stuff that Kyuubey gave you your own armory in the Officio for, right?"

Yeah, you were. So she should know that it wasn't all you that was being awesome out there. ...In fact, it was probably you that got yourself stabbed. In front of live television, even.

"But you got stabbed in such a cool way, though!" Kyoko's enthusiasm here shows no sign of flagging at all, even if you yourself admitted just how much you suck. "You kept beating their faces in even when you had spears sticking out of you! That was PERFECT!" She giggles, here. "Aw, man, I wish I was there to see it in person! You're an awesome Warmaster, Murderface!"

You turn to glance at Sayaka - you know she heard that, Kyoko was talking loud enough for her to hear - and the blue-haired Eversor merely snorts at this, before turning away, grumbling.

You thank Kyoko for the compliment, anyway. Smirking all the while.

"No problem! Oh, Sayaka's there with you, yeah? I don't see her onstage, it's a solo number I think. She doing okay?"

You reply to the affirmative. In fact, she just finished healing you.

"Oh? Ah, let her rest for a bit, yeah, Murderface? She kinda gets woozy after healing people, so just let her sit for a bit and she'll be okay."

Huh, right. You didn't know that. Sure, you'll let her take it easy, too.

...By the way, how's their mission going, anyway? How's Midori?

"Oh, hah!" It's here that Kyoko guffaws. "I was gonna brag about it when you got back, but I guess this is a good time as any! We--hey, wait, Midori! You told me I could tell her! Stop being--" Her voice gets cut off with a brief scuffle, and what sounds like Midori frantically pleading. You then hear Kyoko shushing her briefly, before replying clearly again. "Anyway, as I was saying before I got rudely interrupted by my JUNIOR here...we did it! We found the girl, she ran away from home to stay with her boyfriend, it looks like! And it's all thanks to MI-DO-RIN!"

You blink at this. Midori found the girl?

"Yeah! Remember how we interviewed some of her classmates and friends? Well, they were clammin' up when we asked them about her. I decided we should start askin' questions somewhere else, but she got the idea to mimic the girl an' try to see if she could cold-call 'em to spilling the beans. It worked out just fine - turns out the girl stole enough money for a chartered flight to meet her online boyfriend in Singapore! Hahaha!"

Oh. Hah. Well. The client must be mad to find that out, then.

"Oh, platinum mad!" Kyoko cackles here. "The maddest! Kyuubey got the cops to storm the boyfriend's house, and now they're both in police custody. Client's on his way now to pick her daughter up personally, and probably punch the dude out! But yeah, we probably would've spent a whole lot longer on this mission if not for Midorin! We finished it ahead of schedule too, so that's a bonus!"

It's...yeah, it's pretty impressive. Her first assignment and she accomplished it before the deadline.

"Oh, and before you tell me anything about being proud of her, you can tell her that tomorrow night!" Kyoko starts cackling louder, here, and you hear Midori trying desperately to get the phone from the red-haired Eversor. "Nah, I get to tell her! You're just gonna keep hedgin', she has to know!"

What? Tomorrow night? Tell her what?

Another brief scuffle, before Midori's voice finally comes on. "S-sempai! I...um...I'm sorry, please forget what Kyoko-san said! She was just making stuff up, a-and--" She gets cut off here by the Eversor loudly proclaiming about how she's totally not. "N-no! Sempai, please--"

You tell her to calm down, and relax. After a few moments, Midori manages to do so, although you can still hear the nervousness in her voice.

"Um. I...well, alright, Kyoko-san wasn't making that up. I was..." The Callidus' voice lowers a bit, as if sounding sulky for the first time. "I was planning this to be a surprise, and everything, but..." You hear her take a deep breath, as if bracing herself for something. You glance towards Sayaka, who seems to be idly scratching her stomach through her costume - the Eversor meeting your gaze and shrugging.

"Sempai, I...if you don't have anything planned tomorrow night, I'd...I'd like us to have dinner someplace. J-just...just the two of us, if that's possible...?"

We aren't romancing Mami, but Midori is insecure enough in the fact that we're actually attracted to her to think that we might be.

I'd say she's pretty consistent with her original character, as portrayed in the anime and in the Different Story manga. She purposefully portrays herself that way because she's afraid of rejection if she shows her flaws. We've seen this to be true, she's hiding her golden weapon.

The adapted characters in this have gotten over most of their original conflicts. Sayaka and Kyouko's relationship is described as paradise, but that's character-defining in itself, and it's going to make it really tragic if something happens to one of them.

>> ☐ Anonymous 10/06/13(Sun)13:02 No.27604061

She's known for being cold and calculating under her warm exterior and thinks nothing of making people do what she wants them to do. It's her internal monologue in Mamiquest part 1.

She also gets really upset when things don't go as planned: see the fallout of Kirika's arc. Bitch stabbed her in the chest and she still hated Murderface for doing what needed to be done.

Yeah. Sure. Dinner tomorrow night sounds great, you reply. You'll be there.

"Um, I...I know this is really short notice, sempai, so if you have anything planned, that's okay, I--" Midori nervously continues to ramble on, clearly trying to fill a perceived gap in the conversation - until your words finally sink in, and she stops dead in her tracks. "W-wait, you said yes? Sempai, you...do you want to go out to dinner with me...? T-tomorrow night?"

...Well, she did say tomorrow night, right? Of course, Midori still has to tell you the exact time and place, but other than that, you're pretty sure you said yes.

There's absolute silence on the other end, before a sharp clattering noise cracks loudly from your phone's speaker like a gunshot, very nearly making you drop the device. The moment you put it back against your ear is when you hear Midori shrieking in a panic, and Kyoko angrily scolding the Callidus about dropping shit that isn't hers, and how Sayaka bought her the phone. More hushed conversation, and Kyoko scolding Midori some more, before you're finally addressed by the red-haired Culexus again.

"Geh. Good thing I got the ruggedized case for this thing, otherwise this'd be in pieces right about now." Kyoko grumbles. "Anyway, Murderface! Midori just ran into the girl's room to calm down, probably to cry it out or puke or something, I dunno." She chuckles here. "She says thanks for accepting her invitation, an' she'll send you the exact details of when and where."

Ah. Right. That's fine, then.

"...She's really got it bad for you, ya know, Murderface?" Kyoko's voice lowers a tad, which, for someone naturally loud and boisterous, is like someone claustrophobic willingly sealing himself into his own coffin. "It's...well, it's kinda like with you and Iori, you know? But I guess a bit more fangirly? That's what I'm getting, anyway."

Fangirly, huh?

>> ☐ Deculture 10/06/13(Sun)13:15 No.27604219

>>27604199

There's a moment of silence here, as Kyoko seems to catch on. "Well, uh, I don't really know what happened back in Siberia, since you guys were together then, but..." Another pause, before the Eversor continues. "Anyway, I'm pretty sure ya know what you're doin'. We're just finishing up here at the client's office, pick up the release and feedback forms from his secretary and stuff, and then we'll be heading back to HQ to report to the boss. Midorin'll be back in your apartment in two hours, tops."

You acknowledge this, and thank her for taking care of Midori for her first assignment. And it seems like she never set your Callidus on fire, too.

"Eh? Oh, don't mention it. I did promise, right?" Kyoko's grin is clearly audible in her voice, now. "And yeah, that's a bit disappointing, isn't it? There's always next time, though! Ahahaha!"

Ha, ha. Very funny.

"Never gets old!" Kyoko grins. "Ah, right, have to go, else my minutes are gonna run out. See ya, Murderface!"

You say goodbye here, and end the call. You shake your head at the conversation, looking down at the screen.

"Midori finally asked you out?" Sayaka pipes up beside you. "Took her long enough, really."

You blink at her. What? Sayaka knew about that...? About Midori?

Sayaka's scowl is enough to melt carbonite, and the unfortunate space smuggler encased inside it. "What, do you think I'm blind, Murderface? I've seen her look at you, for fuck's sake! And the entire Officio's talking about how the Warmaster bought a no-name, green-haired Callidus the fucking Waifu Set for lunch!"

[2/3]

"Of course I fucking know--" Sayaka starts, but takes a deep breath, to calm herself down. "Look, it's none of my business, but I'll tell you all the same to be careful, alright?" She glares at you. "Iori's still infatuated with you. She literally froze on the spot when she saw you get speared in the back, before Ruri jolted her out of it by switching numbers and getting her into singing a solo." It's here that the blue-haired Eversor's eyes narrow. "And if I find out you're trying to start a harem like Kharn, Murderface--"

Yeah, yeah. She'll gut you like a fish.

"...How'd you know I was going to say that?"

Well, aren't you supposed to be training to be more Eversor-like? You just started thinking about what a crazy Eversor would actually say.

"Smartass!"

What do you now?

You excuse yourself again - and Sayaka waves you off again - as you make a call of your own, this time to Mami. You did say yes to Midori taking you out to dinner tomorrow night, so...it follows that you have to reschedule with the blonde.

...It's...Mami wouldn't mind, right? She'd understand. Midori didn't mean to pick the same date and time as Mami to ask you out. And...it just didn't feel right to say no to Midori. She did save you, after all. Risking her life far too many times to save yours, in an overlapping hellscape of insanity and despair.

Mami would understand. She would. She's Mami.

You tap at your phone's screen to engage the call, taking a deep breath and holding it up to your ear once more. Mentally bracing yourself, to tell Mami that you've decided to go eat dinner with someone else other than her.

Mami's phone rings once, twice, three times, before she picks up. When she does, her voice is the same as it's always been - pleasant, warm, just like honey.

Or pancake syrup.

Yeah.

"Ah, Chiaki-san?" She sounds...well, surprised, of all things. "Is the concert over already? How is the mission going?"

You blink at this. No, the concert's not over yet, but the mission's going fine. You managed to capture the entire hostile group that tried to get you - and your principal - killed, as well as save the Soul Gem of one of your Vindicare squad. You're just taking a breather at the moment."

"Oh, congratulations, Chiaki-san! Very well done - I knew you could do it!" You can hear her smiling beautifully over the line. "There was no doubt in my mind that you'd do wonderfully in your first mission as Warmaster!"

You couldn't help but feel a flush of pleasure at her praise, here. Yeah, Sayaka was rather gruff and curt about it, while Kyoko was out-and-out MAXIMUM VOLUME, but for it to come from Mami, well...you're pretty happy to hear her approve, is what you're getting at here.

...Wait, she didn't see you fight? Wasn't she watching?

"Ah. Hee." Mami giggles here, guiltily, as if you've caught her using unicorn blood to make her pancakes. "Ah, sorry, Chiaki-san! I know a lot of the girls here are watching from the assembly room downstairs, but I stepped out just after I had Kyuubey-san pass you my message." She seems to hesitate, here. "I find it hard to watch Magical Girls fight, especially...especially when the fight involves people I know and care about." A light, if awkward laugh. "It's strange, isn't it? I've never balked from a fight when I was still on active duty, myself, but..."

...No. No, it's not weird at all, you tell her. It's...you can understand where she's coming from, at least. You doubt you'd want her to see how you look like now, anyway.

"I don't mean it like that, Chiaki-san." Mami chides you slightly. "Ah! Since you did a good job, we'll have that dinner tomorrow, just like I promised! And I'll be sure to make things extra special - it'll be a dinner you'll never forget!"

...It seems Mami is also set on the dinner for tomorrow night.

How do you let her know that you're rescheduling?

“Clean the arena please! We don’t want any unbalanced matches due to someone slipping on the blood!”

I wish I could see the announcer to ask why that was really necessary. Yes, there was blood and gore everywhere, but honestly, most girls here are used to fighting while covered in blood. If I’m one of the least violent ones here and I’m used to it, there shouldn’t be a problem. Hell, I’m pretty sure someone has made their own fighting style that takes advantage of the blood on the ground.

Well, that would completely defeat my point wouldn’t it?

Still, the tournament continues. The fights get harder, the audience gets more pleased and the only disappointed ones are the girls who lost. Only rookies got into the tournament anyway, so there’s always time for improvement on their part. They just get to know what they’re doing wrong first hand. Lessons by death; Eightballs’ favorite style.

We are right now at the semi-finals after that last match, and I’m honestly surprised I’ve gotten this far. Considering how ruthless of a reputation our offircio has compared to others, I’m left wondering where the novice murder monsters are. Well, Sami has been doing particularly well in that regard; she’s got this far too. I think there’s another Eversor and a Callidus along with us two, so it should be an interesting night for the both of us.

Despite this achievement, I don’t think I’m all that keen about winning the entire thing. I know I have a reputation for some things I’ve done, including the museum fight, but when a girl gets renown for dangerous acts and doesn’t like being talked to, the rep can turn sour.

The people who hosted this tournament wanted to bring out the monsters in us all, to pick and pry apart at the weak. I’m not here to win, I’m here to show that I’m sane.

The audience is a mess of people; some I recognize and some I don’t. Just because I know what they look like doesn’t mean I know their name. Except-

Oh god, brace for impact.

“Gina! I’m proud of you!” My world almost spins around as I’m put into a certain someone’s gracious chest with little means of escape. Well, I could harm her but it wouldn’t be the wisest decision.

“Hi, Izzy. I see you’ve found me.” It takes a while to part myself from her; needing to get out any loose strands of her long lavender hair out of the way along with freeing myself from her arms. “I didn’t think you would be one to be a spectator for violence.”

“I’m here for you guys! I didn’t think you’d go for something like this. You and Sami are always surprising me!” She states with a cheery grin, always with her eyes either closed or open a sliver.

“Well, you did get this far! I can already imagine you on a poster in the wall, with the text saying ‘beware the reclusive cute, monster of the ring, future savior of the eighth!”

And it’s these comments that just…

“YAY! New announcement everyones!” The squeaky announcer comes again which interrupts my attempt to talk back at Izzy. “First place winner gets a super-special extra prize! But~, we’re keeping it unknown until you win! So keep fightin’ hard girls, a secret awaits the best of the best!”

“Well things just got interesting.” I turn away from her and look to the arena. “Wonder if this is going to impede her performance.”

“I’m sure Sami won’t mind some extra sugar here!” That’s Izzy, constantly bringing up points about other people they don’t want told. One of the oldest – yet one of the less mature – Vindicares, she took an eye to me and Sami when we wanted to go on our own paths, semi-thwarting us. At least I can manage her presence more then her.

Sami herself is next in line, going up against another Eversor. Apparently her opponent also has a tendency to be flashy during combat and try to end it quickly, only with a bit more flair. Sami walks up to the arena to view her-

Oh hey, it IS Megan from earlier. Long orange hair, orange eyes too, set in her uniform which takes on the royal, European princess style that looks hugely overdone on the frills and red curly lines over its orange base. She has… some kind of container attached to her back that’s held on by a red strap over her uniform. Her weapon, probably, but what is it?

Both are set at opposite sides of the ring. Even if Sami has the same intentions as me, she looks different, somehow. Maybe she does want to win for some reason. Megan, on the other hand, isn’t looking at the prize. She has that look the superiors are looking for.

She’s looking for blood.

“Three, two, one, fight!”

It was like watching two animals try to intimidate each other out of the fight. Sami did her usual trick, but Megan quickly pulled out her weapon from its container and… whipped it around. It's a whip… a metal whip. My mistake, a SPIKED, CHAIN-LINK WHIP that's about…how long? Is it rotating too?

Whatever fear was in Sami has vanished; replaced with a fierce determination. If she wants to prove herself better than a bloodthirsty killer, this is her chance. Then again, neither of us knows Megan, so there's no telling what she's really after.

Maybe she's also just putting up a show, wanting the higher-ups to look down upon her and smile.

They stand at a standstill, with both of their tools of destruction hovering and flailing around until Sami decides to take the first strike with two strings of ribbon, and then the fireworks start. With each blow Sami tries to make, Megan whips accordingly and shreds anything that gets too close while slowly advancing, closing the distance between the two. Electric sparks fly out from the impact as pieces of red cloth slowly fall down and disintegrate before they hit the ground.

Realization hits her that this isn't going to work, and she presses four ribbons down to launch herself into the air, keeping herself up with the balance between the beams. She changes from sweeping strikes to direct attacks from above, charging each piece downward to impale Megan below. She tries to dodge, but more keep coming until one grazes her shoulder. Taking the chances she jumps high and whips upward, ripping off the next ribbon headed for her and wrapping the spiked chain tightly around Sami.

With her in command, Megan slams her down on the floor, dragging the ribbons with her which cut into her sides and almost making her drop the whip. Then, as if she's done it a thousand times, Megan twists the handle on the whip, pulls it to one side and-

Stops. Sami starts screaming as she sees the chain of metal try to turn, meeting the resistance of her ribbons going in the opposite direction. I can see Izzy at my side muttering something under her breath, her completely open and focusing on the fight, almost giving a death glare. It's the reason she doesn't always have her eyes open; she can quickly turn from playful and childish to dead-serious and gritty in a flash, and when she gets serious… well, I've only seen it once so far, but it was pretty gruesome.

Megan whips the chain and causes Sami to loose her breath with what I assume were electric shocks. The ribbons also spas out, loosening their grip on the chain which gives Megan the sudden advantage. Attempting again, she grips tightly, pulls to one side…

I reflexively covered my eyes with my arm, but the blood only got so far as the first row of spectators.

After a terrible cry of metal against flesh and bone, I lowered my arm to see… I could barely tell it was Sami anymore save for her intact head. Everything from her chest to her thighs were shredded open like a bomb was planted in her stomach. Blood and bones were flung everywhere, her rib cage had two bones misplaced somewhere on the arena floor and her intestines began to drop down.

"Ladies!" Megan calls out, turning to the audience with her hands high like a magician performing on stage. "I give you, the Shredifier!" Her proclamation bounces off the walls as Sami falls into a lifeless heap on the floor. The crowd roars in excitement.

Two things are keeping me from going to Megan and putting her down: I've done the exact thing to other people before, and Sami will come back from this. Oh, and a third: I can get my revenge in the finals, if I win.

"…Oh, you're not going up?" Izzy asks with a confused expression. I turn to her, smile and shake my head.

"Last time I ran to the defense of a friend, it didn't end well. I know my own control." I look back to the stage where

Megan gets the cheers as she walks off the stage, already being cleaned for my next fight.

“Besides, I can just kick her ass later.”

“The Eversor fight is over!” The announcer kicks in “Time for the Callidus fight!”

The Callidus I get to fight was the winner of the last quarter-final match that was postponed due to an “emergency” on her opponents’ part. Normally the tournament keeps it so that a MG only fights one match per day of the tourney, but the exception was made for her. Still, doesn’t mean I can just think she’ll be weaker because she already fought today. It would be… unwise to think that of a Callidus.

Izzy gives me her best wishes as I head up to the arena to fight the other MG. Her dress starts as white then turns blue as it goes down in a regular dress that only goes to mini-skirt length. A rapier sword is her preferred weapon: they’re the ones with the circular handles that hold an extremely thin but sharp blade.

I swear if I ever get called a nerd for something, it will be my knowledge of weapons.

We both ready ourselves for the fight, and I can tell she’s eager. I feel like I’m the only fighter left who doesn’t want to bathe in the blood of my opponent. I’m just fighting to –not- die.

“Three, two, one, fight!”

FUCK SHE’S FAST.

She wants to slice and dice; quick strikes and avoiding power struggles until I’m worn down enough to not fight back efficiently. Knowing how… iffy my stamina can be, I’ll need to finish this quick, if I can manage to find a way to make her stop attacking. I can’t parry with the mace forever.

Her blade manages to get past my mace once and nick my arm, leaving a deep scratch on the right. The pain boils, and once I manage to stop her blade between the maces slits, I manage to fly a bolt right at her, knocking her back. When she gets back her footing, she takes a deep breath, raises her sword to the sky and stabs the ground.

Great, time for magic.

White grid marks cover the entire floor from the point of impact. She raises her sword as a column raises her into the air as my feet began to shift under moving ground. I bolt out of my last position as a wave of magic follows behind me, rippling across the floor and making the surface spike. It’s like a real life version of recording sound waves from music.

Shielding myself first, I jump and slam the hammer as hard as I can to… no avail. She controls the battle field now, including the tower she’s perched herself on and the wave coming behind me.

I have an idea but it’s probably stupid. Oh well.

The pillar doesn’t even budge as I kick off of it into the wave. Using the upward force from the wave as it crashes into the column I manage enough height to reach the top to find her waiting for me. She immediately tries to slash upward at me, but her blade screeches across the shield. It reaches it limit point and explodes, sending her off balance enough for me to get one good hit in her chest. The entire pillar collapses as we both fall to the floor, with the force of the hit sending her back. Cheers coming from the crowd are muffed through the combat, which get louder when I throw my hammer at her which connects nicely with her head and then vanishes.

She scrambles to her feet, her sword still clutched in her hand and glowing. Sure, at this level of fighting a few broken ribs and a cracked skull don’t mean much when you have magic. But when she looks at me again I can tell she just wants me dead right now. Using the elevation trick again, she pushes herself off of a wall and sprints at me. I raise my right arm to-

…block with the hammer which spawned in my left hand.

There’s a certain amount of gag reflex one has to sounds, and I’m sure the parting of skin as her blade drove itself through my entire arm, end to end, would make any normal being part.

We, at least, are magical girls. I still heard some screams in the audience, though.

Fucking. Shit. This pain…

It's Been A While.

I think it's the fastest punch I pulled off for myself; my left hand going straight for her jaw. Her hand left the handle, keeping the damn sword in-

Why Don't We Make Them Remember?

She flies to the other end of the arena, collapsing near the edge as her fingers drag along the floor to stop herself. It's a slow walk over to her, the mace in one hand and the sword still stuck and-

We've Always Had That Power.

The mace drops to the floor. I don't need it for what I need to do. Left hand grips the handle stuck in the right as I feel that power spike coming again.

"So Let's Bring The Pain."

One swift motion. One burst of power. The sword flies free from my arm as the tissue and blood lost are vacuumed back in. I stand blazing grey-blue, seeing the fear in her eyes.

Eightball was right; they don't know what they're looking at.

I can feel it spiraling down my arms, gathering in my palms, swirling into a mesh of power. As it readies, the words fall out of my mouth so naturally.

"Kamehameha, bitch."

One bolt was all it took to completely knock her unconscious. Two killed her outright. Three shattered the ground she was under. The last was contained within a punch that sent her through the arena, crashing on the concrete down below, splattering her everywhere.

The crowd was silent for a while, then erupted in cheers and I descended the arena stairs and headed my way out.

Nobody really needs to know what they looked at; all they need to know is that it works.

"Damn. The hell happened in there?"

Just outside the building I'm greeted by the previous victor in more casual clothes. Hands in her jean pockets, she looks very relaxed for someone who had to fight for her life a few minutes prior.

"I don't think you –really- want to know." Walking it off doesn't help as Megan just tags along with me.

"Aw come on, what happened to sportsmanship?" She opens a can of soda and drinks a good amount before speaking again. "Ya know, you're not really that popular. Sure you made a good opening impression with that whole museum thing, but if you can't keep up the show nobody's going to respect you. Me on the other hand…" Yawning behind me, I turn my head and stop to see her stretching. "Once I knew I was a fan-favorite, I kept it up. The audience will be with me when we fight."

"You seem too calm about this."

"Huh? Yea, I get that." She strides ahead of me, turning around and bowing. "That's Megan Ashwood for you. I fight for battle, not blood."

"So we do have something in common." I walk past her, heading to where Sami would be restored. "We don't fight for spilling blood."

"I like to be challenged." She states walking back up to me. "Which brings me to you."

We stop and look at each other at the same time. She’s a bit taller then me, but it’s not enough to make it evident in combat. Maybe around my age, give or take a year. Her facial scars, however slight, show she’s been in combat for a long time since she was put in, possibly fighting before she was even admitted.

“I have no idea what to expect from you at all.” She states blankly as I chuckle and grin.

“Good, I’d like to keep it that way. Makes better fights.”

She left me alone after that as I made my way to the building. I get a few cheers of congratulations, or of the “you totally kicked her ass!” kind. While nice, too much attention does get annoying. It stops once I get to the elevator and change floors, the other girls inside seemingly on their own business.

I hope I don’t get as bad as them; they seem way too focused on what their jobs are. We are magical girls, with girls being a part of it. It’s good to take a break and remind ourselves of who we are, or at least used to be.

When I got to Sami she was making sure everything was still working. Flexing and bending her arms, hands, legs and ribbons.

“So, how was death?”

“Didn’t like it.”

“Well duh. I was wondering what it felt like.” I have yet to actually die during a mission or otherwise, so I want to be ready whenever it might happen. Or just incase I loose tomorrow.

“It’s like fainting, but worse.” She starts. “Energy quickly leaves your body, pain deafens your thoughts and your muscles tense before dropping your body.”

“Great. Something to look forward to. Least it’s not as bad for being… well, us.” A chuckle from both of us was followed by silence until she spoke up again.

“I hope you think this will be all worth it in the end. Lots of girls don’t.”

“I know that.” I reply with a grin. “I’m sure both of us have a long way to go to be satisfied, though.”

She smiled lightly at that. The end is all that some see, not the distance. For now, at least the two of us can go far before we reach the end, because that’s all that matters.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/12/13(Sat)09:11 No.27701305

You pull away your smartphone from your ear and glance down at its screen, the smiling face of Tomoe Mami beaming up at you with LED-backlit brilliance.

You've never lied to her before. Now, you're about to.

>> ☐ Deculture 10/12/13(Sat)09:13 No.27701329

>>27701305

…Well, there was that one time, when you told her you were training Kumatora, when in fact you simply ditched the trainee Eversor and holed yourself up in your apartment with three stolen bottles of Kong and enough painkillers to kill five grown men.

Then there was that time when you lied about Kyoko setting you on fire, grumbling that someone got lucky with a Molotov Cocktail instead, sparing the red-headed Eversor from a heartfelt lecture that could drive even Kirika to tears. Not because of boredom, because of having your entire soul shattered at the concept of disappointing someone so patient, so forgiving, that her crying because of you alone made you want to crush your own Soul Gem underfoot instead.

…Alright, so you're not really innocent on the whole 'not lying' thing. But you're trying. You haven't lied to her very recently, as far as you can remember.

Maybe.

You don't know.

But not telling her something isn't the same as lying to her, right?

Tomoe Mami doesn't need to know that you're trying to reschedule because Hanegawa Midori asked you out for dinner tomorrow night, right?

"Chiaki-san?" Mami's voice floats up from the phone's receiver, tinny and small in this distance. You hold the device back up to your ear, and you state your case.

"…Breakfast or lunch…?" She echoes you as you finally finish, and you swallow audibly as you hear her shuffling papers around. "Mmm, I'm sorry, Chiaki-san, but I'm kind of booked all day. There's a lot to do, and I don't think I can sneak out long enough for us to have fun together. What's wrong with dinner, anyway?"

It's here, then, that Mami's voice takes on a rather mischievous tone.

"Or…is Chiaki-san trying to subtly reschedule because she's having someone else for dinner?"

How did she--crap. CRAP!

"Murderface?" Sayaka turns towards you, one eyebrow quirking upward. "What's up with you? You started shaking all of a sudden."

How do you respond?

Right, but usually, when I see detached sleeves, there is no sleeve left on the original top, often leaving armpits exposed. In this case, however, it is different. So I was wondering if there was another name for just the skin around the bicep, or if this was included in "detached sleeves". You know, so I can be accurate in describing my new fetish.

You wave Sayaka off, feeling a cold sweat break out all over you as you sheepishly admit the truth to Mami. Yes, you are in fact trying to reschedule, because Midori…well, she also asked you out for dinner tomorrow night. You're…you're not exactly sure why you thought she wouldn't understand, why you thought you needed to lie about it in the first place. …You're really, really sorry about that.

Time seems to slow down to an almost interminable crawl, and for once it's not because of your Shield at all - rather, it's because Mami seems to go quiet at your response, with only the sound of shuffling paper coming from the other end of the line. Your throat goes dry and you feel your chest tighten as you unconsciously hold your breath, waiting for something, anything, hoping against hope that the next words coming from the blonde wouldn't be…well, her telling you how much you've let her down again.

"…Oh, Midori?" The blonde's voice sounds…pleasantly surprised, instead of the heartbreaking disappointment you were expecting. "Is she the one trying to steal you away from me, Chiaki-san?"

W-what? Steal away…? N-no, you were just…uh…

You turn to Sayaka, horrified at what you're hearing - and the blue-haired Eversor merely frowns at your expression. "Ugh, what are you doing, Murderface? Making faces? Yeah, really mature--"

"It's fine, Chiaki-san!" You hear Mami say a few moments after she'd stopped giggling. "Seriously, that was all you needed to say! Honestly, I was wondering when you'd take her out somewhere nice yourself - in fact, I was going to use our dinner to nudge you in that direction, just in case you forgot !"

O-oh? Mami was going to do that…?

"Yes, and it looks like I won't have to!" Another giggle. "Chiaki-san, I'm flattered you thought of my feelings, but please consider what it would've been like if I found out your real reason of rescheduling from someone else. What would you have felt if our situations were reversed, if Chiaki-san asked me out on a date, and I rescheduled without telling you the real reason?"

…You'd feel pretty shitty about it.

"See?" Mami's voice here now carries a mild tone of admonishment. "Granted, I can't scold you too much, since I didn't exactly ask you out, more like simply had Kyuubey-san pass my invitation on…but still, Chiaki-san, even if you know someone's going to get hurt by you telling the truth, you should do so anyway - because keeping the truth from them's going to hurt a lot more in the long run, especially when they find out."

Right. Okay. You'll remember that.

S-so, uh. When would your dinner with Mami be, then?

"Hmm…well, I'm not so sure, but I'll notify you in advance when I get some time off, alright, Chiaki-san? Tomorrow night was supposed to be my night off, that's why I asked you. But, hmm, I'm sure I'll find something else to do." Another giggle. "Ah, how are you and Sayaka-chan? Are the both of you behaving?"

Y-yeah. Yeah, you're both fine. She just finished healing you, in fact.

"Ah, please thank her for me, Chiaki-san, even if you have already." More shuffling of paper, and then a sudden beeping noise in the background. "Oh, there goes my alarm! I have to go now, Chiaki-san, I have dinner arrangements! Good luck with the rest of your operation, and please congratulate Midori for me!"

Dinner arrangements? Er…sure. Yeah. That's fine. You'll do that.

Mami cheerfully says her goodbyes, and you return them just before she clicks off. You look at your smartphone for a few moments more, before shoving it back into your inventory. Burying your face in your hands.

"Everything okay, Murderface?" Sayaka pipes up again. "Hey, did I miss a wound or what? Do you need some more healing?" You feel a firm hand on your shoulder. "Hey, Murderface. Don't die on me now, fuckface."

You're fine, you growl at her, shrugging her hand off. You just need a moment or so.

It's here, then, that you hear someone's loud, cheerful, usually-autotuned-to-hell voice coming from behind you, along with a patter of hurried footsteps. Calling your name.

"Well, better enjoy that moment quick, because the client's here." Sayaka glances at her wristwatch. "Huh. So we're nearly finished with all the song numbers? That's…I thought we were going pretty fucking fast, but not this fast."

Well, that's both good news and bad news, isn't it? You shake your head, before reaching up in order to make sure your Warmaster Cap's on straight. Sighing deeply, you stand up in order to receive the superidol - until, of course, you're very nearly knocked down by Iori flying at you from out of fucking nowhere and hugging you tight.

No words from her, here, just her crying into your bloody costume. Her arms wrapped around you in a tight, crushing grip.

"Chiaki-chan!" Ruri reaches you a few moments later, breathless from the jog, her eyes wide and glowing, her smile so wide it should be a grin. "Oh, man, why didn't you tell me you were going to steal the show like that?! I could've arranged the entire show around that exhibition! Everyone's rechirping and reflagging THAT part of the concert like crazy!" The superidol is completely ecstatic, waving both her arms energetically, this way and that - enough that one long, heavy-looking twintail whaps a certain pale-faced Deepthroat in the face. "Our Blu-Ray preorders are through the roof the moment that happened!"

You watch as Iori's retreating form disappears behind a gaggle of extras, the brown-haired idol shouldering aside a few as she continues to run. Before you could turn back to the other idol addressing you - the latter markedly much more annoying than the former - it's here that you see Sayaka step forward, taking her own blood-spattered gloves off.

"I'll go." The blue-haired Eversor's voice is somewhat resigned, somehow, but also carries with a note of relief. "Stay here, keep watch on the principal. Alright?"

You silently nod at this, before quietly thanking her.

"…Yeah." Sayaka shakes her head, before heading out, calling the brown-haired idol's name as she does so. One extra gets in her way, and gets very nearly knocked into the floor if it weren't for his fellow extras cushioning the impact. Leaving you alone with your client, who seems to have also taken in the strange scene.

"She'll get over it, Chiaki-chan." Ruri's voice is soft, uncharacteristically tender. "I know she doesn't look it - no idol looks it - but we're made of really tough stuff. At least, in here." She points to her chest, right above her heart. "We can't fall in love with just anyone, and even if we do, we have to live with the fact that it's just not possible." The super idol shakes her head mournfully. "Two, maybe three days alone, and she'll be okay. We take this idol thing seriously, you know."

…Where'd that come from, all of a sudden? She was asking you about your gauntlets earlier, like some kid hopped up on pure sugar. Could she at least warn you beforehand if she's going to switch personalities on you like that?

"Can't, that's part of the appeal!" She winks at you, all sobriety gone, replaced with her typical idol bounciness and cheer. "And if you'll note, that was my Wise Beyond Her Years voice! Right now I'm in the I Can't Believe My Super Idol Is This Cute In Person voice!"

>> ☐ Deculture 10/12/13(Sat)11:59 No.27702844

>>27702826

Yeah. You can tell. Anyway--

"I still have to ask about those cool punchy things, though! Really, where are you hiding them?" She looks around and behind you. "How are you lugging 'em around?! And how do they feel like? Don't they weigh you down a whole lot when you're using them?!"

…You explain here, to the ecstatic idol, that….well, the gauntlets are magic. That's it. You can't really describe how they work, because she'd never get it, and you're pretty sure it's classified to non-Officio people.

And no, she can't wear them or try them out.

That last bit nets you the saddest-looking pout from the super idol, one that you actually had to look away from. Not because it's working, but because you feel insulted that she think it'd actually work on you. For fuck's sake, you're not that big of a pushover.

"…Well, they're still cool, anyway." Ruri says after a moment, taking a seat on the bench you'd been resting on - and you find yourself taking a seat too. "How did it feel, though? Using that kind of thing?" It's here that you catch the faintest hint of hesitation on the idol's voice, as if unsure on how to continue here but doing so anyway. "…It kind of looked like you were really having fun, earlier, Chiaki-chan. But in a sort of...scary way."

How do you respond?

1. first time in the hotel suite; we were generally useless and sitting in the recliner until Pinky got us out of Midori's illusion.
2. second time, we were fighting Kilgore and not even Kyouko was able to do much to him, and I don't see you saying Kyouko is useless; we needed Tiny Pete and an anti-material rifle.
3. she wasn't brought to Siberia so of course she couldn't jump into a Witch Barrier after us.

I don't even hate Iori; but the thing is?

She's not a magical girl, and if she did jump in that witch barrier, she'd have been stupid and have died. And her becoming a magical girl is a terrible idea for everyone involved.

The tl;dr version: Iori's not a good person to get involved with for all parties; she fell in love with an idolised image of Murderface who saved her, was jealous and upset when she found out Chiaki was involved with others, bitched around and moped, and even had she a more amenable attitude STILL would not be a good idea to get involved with; because she'd still be useless and shouldn't become a magical girl and has her own life to lead.

We have reason to suspect, but we have just as much reason to doubt. That being that Yuu is the original user of the gauntlets. Yuu is a girl in her source material. Only a magical girl can be the original users of a golden weapon.

That's how it stands now, Decu has not told us if magical shonen exist.

I don't really care either way. Yuu is Yuu, and Yuu is a good girl. Even if HE is a good girl.

Fun? You slouch forward again, taking your own glasses off momentarily to rub the fatigue out of your eyes with your blood-caked fingers. It's…no, you've never thought of it as fun. You're not going to lie, there is some small part of you that enjoys hurting people, but the way bigger part of you considers it a job. A paycheck. A way to earn your salary. It's like Ruri with her singing gig - she gets paid to sing autotuned shit, you get paid to hurt people. And protect them from time to time. Simple as that.

"…Is it really that simple, Chiaki-chan?" Ruri murmurs, her tone curiously pensive. "You don't look like the sort who thinks money's really important." You turn to her, one eyebrow quirking upward questioningly, and she smiles.

"Oh, you know what I mean." The green-haired super idol nudges your freshly-healed ribs with a gentle elbow. "You're not like the other Magical Girls I hired before. You don't obsess over your own image, you're not checking your smartphone every ten seconds, and you're not tripping all over yourself trying to, you know, impress me or make nice with me, and all. You're not…" The idol makes a cyclical gesture with a hand, her delicate fingernails painted a bright electric green shining as the light from the corridor hits each one.

"…hungry, in that kind of way. You're hungry to prove yourself, or…or to make sure someone close to you isn't disappointed. I mean, Warmaster and everything, that's pretty important, right? You don't get to that kind of rank without a whole lot of experience, yeah?" She turns to grin at you. "Did I get Chiaki-chan right, or what?"

…You're not going to say she got everything wrong, but what's this about? Is she trying to analyze you now?

"I did say I wanted to learn more about you, Chiaki-chan, remember? That's what I'm doing." Ruri makes a triumphant sound, here, crossing her arms underneath her ample chest. "And honestly, trying to do that's been as easy as stirring dried concrete! Sometimes you're an easy read, sometimes I can't even predict what you're about to do!"

Hnh. Well. You'll count that as a good thing, considering keeping hostiles guessing is kind of part of the entire deal.

You do note, however, that she didn't even ask if you were alright. And for someone who was moments away from death, earlier, she bounced back really quickly.

"…Chiaki-chan, I'm a Super Idol. The only one in the world, and the best there is." Ruri shakes her head at you. "This isn't the first time something like this has happened, you know! Us idols are walking targets no matter where we go. Whether it's a charity concert or a fundraising or an album launch, some idiot gets it into their head that it'll be nice to kill or rape or kidnap one of us, just to show how big his balls are." She lets out a sigh, here. "Yayoi-chan and Iori-chan aren't special cases, you know. And it's not just Tojo Group trying to get me into their family as some sort of breeding…thing." She makes a face, here. "I wouldn't say we've got it just as dangerous as Magical Girls, but I'd say we're kind of close!"

Right. If it was that dangerous, though, why continue? She's probably rich enough to retire at her age, right? Enough money to last three lifetimes?

"Five, actually," Ruri giggles, before suddenly leaning in closer, her voice lowering to a conspiratorial whisper. "But…I'll let you in on a little secret. It used to be all for the money, at least in my case. But then, I met someone, and that changed. Now…" She leans back, a self-satisfied smile on her face.

There's a moment of silence between the both of you, and before you could reply, Deepthroat sidles up to the idol and whispers something in her ear. Ruri blinks at this, before jumping up to her feet. "Oh, I didn't know it was already Encore Time! I forgot!" She twirls in place, once, before posing in front of you. "Alright, time to get this concert wrapped up! Wait for me, Chiaki-chan, I just have a few new songs to plug, and then we're good to go!" And with that, she runs off, Deepthroat in tow. You almost make to follow her, until you see the tell-tale glow of Enishi shadowing her - along with two of Squad Hiryu at her heels.

You sit back down on the bench, feeling more tired than you've ever been. Letting out a sigh, you take off your Warmaster's Cap, placing it on your lap, and listen to the crowd get kicked into high gear again with one of Ruri's songs starting up.

…You hope Iori's okay. You made it clear to her that you only wanted to be friends, so maybe…maybe this approach will help cement that.

You frown, here, as you realize that by hugging you, she got blood all over her costume, too. Which probably would NOT have helped. Ugh.

"While I don't condone my agents - including my Warmaster - slacking off while being on duty, I think you can be excused this time, Matsuda." It's here that Kyuubey's voice rings clearly in your head like an alarm bell, causing you to stiffen up in surprise. "It's not everyday you fight off a principal assassination attempt in front of a live stadium audience. And stylishly at that."

Damn bastard mutant cat, what's he doing here?!

"Hm?" Kyuubey tilts its head to the side as it looks at you. "I arrived with the conveyance you requested, the one to take your prisoners back to the Headquarters for interrogation. I wasn't doing anything else at the time, so I thought to check up on you personally, see how my Warmaster's doing."

…Well, if that's all he's up to, then sure. You shake your head, rummaging in your inventory for your spare pack of cigarettes- the other spare you kept around in case your first spare got stolen, or something. The cigarillo you were smoking earlier already nothing more than a bitter memory on your tongue. You find your squashed, double-spare pack, and you coax a bent cigarette from it. A click from your zippo and a puff of smoke, and you could breathe again.

If he's looking for a debriefing, then he'll have to wait until the mission's over.

"About that." Kyuubey turns back to the baseball field, his round crimson eyes glinting with the spark of fireworks being released into the air as the encore continued. "I've received word from 2020 Productions - Kirishima's agency and our de facto client - that they will be cutting the operation time by half. Meaning, the mission ends formally tomorrow morning."

Tomorrow morning…? But there's another concert tomorrow, right?

The Incubator shakes his head. "2020 Productions has decided that the current climate, as it is, is not safe for Kirishima. The official excuse, which will be released to news agencies tomorrow, is that Kirishima has come down with a temporary illness that requires a lot of bed rest. There will be refunds, I imagine, and televised apologies. Of course, they're still paying for the entire duration - this was after the contract with us was signed, after all." He looks at you. "I'm sure you're very disappointed. You were looking forward to spending more time with the principal, weren't you?"

How do you react?

I thought the main discussion was still Higurashi.

Umineko, I think, took the same sort of alternate universe/time loop and had the main character from the first loop observing the rest and try to prove that the murders were done mundanely and all of the magic he's seeing was embellishment by the narrator/self-proclaimed witch who is presenting to him the rest of the loops.

I only watched the anime for Umineko, but I heard the VNs were all pretty good except for the last one.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Protoculture 10/14/13(Mon)06:18 No.27737730

You tell your alien cat of a boss that you don't have an opinion, one way or another, about you having to spend considerably less time babysitting the most popular - and coincidentally the most annoying - idol in the world. You're not paid to care.

Still, if he wants you to pet him for a bit, you wouldn't say no. Maybe for a few seconds, and just on the head. ...Probably some ear-scratching, but nothing beyond that. You don't want to make this weird.

There's a moment of silence here, before Kyuubey turns away from you. "I appreciate the offer, Matsuda, but it won't be necessary. I already have Tomoe Mami to attend to that kind of need, if it ever comes up."

...Ah. Huh. All...alright, then. Y-you were just joking, anyway.

"There's no need to sound offended, Matsuda."

You're not offended! God damn mutant bastard cat!

>> ☐ Protoculture 10/14/13(Mon)06:19 No.27737738

"If you say so." It's here he clears his throat. "Now, before you ask, no, this abrupt change of plans is not about your performance tonight - at least, as far as I've heard. 2020 Productions simply wishes to move their most important asset somewhere safer for the time being. I did volunteer you to at least accompany her to where they're shipping her off to, but..."

It's here that the alien feline lets out its equivalent of a sigh and a shrug. Betraying the faintest note of irritation and frustration in his voice. "They seem to have their own plans, so I didn't press the issue."

...Well. Sounds like idol production agencies are just as hard to deal with as their own idols, huh?

"Not as such. Just this particular one." Kyuubey lets out another sigh, his tail flicking from side to side. He looks up at you again, and you have the feeling that he's about to say something - but seems to decide against it at the last moment. As if he doesn't trust you enough, just yet.

"Nevermind that. No need to bore with you difficult business relationships, Matsuda." He shakes his head. "In any case, the security detail should be finished loading your victims - and their helpers - into the conveyance Karasawa requested. Following the rules and regulations set by the First Officio in handling Magical Girl prisoners, we will hold them seperate Silent Rooms and have them interrogated, before conducting a proper trial to decide whether we allow them to live and re-integrate them into our own ranks, or submit them to execution." He nods at you. "You will, of course, be required to preside over the trial as a judge."

You get to do that kind of thing?

"Well, of course. You are Warmaster, after all." Kyuubey blinks, here. "Before we get into that, though - is there anything else that happened during this assassination attempt? Something else you'd like to mention that came up?"

...Sounds like the mutant cat's trying to fish for something.

How do you respond?

We should ask Mami (or I guess Kyuubei if we need to) for files and info on Wendy. Jut blame it on bad dreams if they ask, since we know they're aware of the connection of Chiaki and her, which should let them not suspect she's around here.

We need to take precautions in case Wendy's bad news. Fair enough not to sick the Officio on her by outing her presence, but we can't just ignore her either because that leaves us clueless and helpless and entirely to blame if she DOES do anything. We need to know more about her (the NECO files are good, but there has to be more info about her methods and powers available to us in the Officio).

You take a long, deep drag from your cigarette, before telling your boss exactly what he wanted to hear. Namely, the bit about the Magical Girls that did their level best to try and reduce you into a greasy stain on the astroturf wasn't actually gunning for Ruri - they were gunning for you, under orders from the Prophet. Kirishima Ruri was simply collateral damage, a way to make an example of the Ninth Officio.

...No, you didn't tell him about Wendy. That would be crazy. You're not sure about her yet, anyway - and if she IS here, then you'd want to find her yourself, first.

"Yes, I gleaned that much from comms traffic, and what Karasawa briefed me on." Kyuubey muses, sounding more amused than anything else. "While I must say this could potentially be a complicating factor if anyone else requests for your personal protection, Matsuda, I cannot help but admire this...Prophet's dedication to getting your attention. It reminds me of a much simpler time, before the Officio System was fully established."

Well, you're glad he's finding this a riot. Was it really better back then?

"What?" The Incubator blinks at you, incredulous. "Oh, no. It was a disorganized, bloody mess. We never got anything done properly, and the Witch population was at an all-time high. A system needed to be formalized and established - if we'd allowed the status quo back then to persist, the Heat Death Incident we'd been working to delay would have occured in no less than two, three years." Another sigh, one that sounded remarkably bitter, even for someone like Kyuubey. "It's all thanks to the First that I managed to get the rest of my brothers to agree to my proposition."

He clears his throat, here. "In any case. As amusing as this Prophet is, allowing her to continue unopposed may present unforeseen complications in the long run. I'll be pushing up this matter a bit higher up the priority ladder - the sooner we can have this resolved, the better."

Are there any leads, yet? You remember assigning the other rank leaders duties about this.

"No concrete ones, excluding what information we may be able to obtain from your victims, Matsuda. I believe Rea Ashford may have a theory in the works, but you'll have to approach her personally for that. And speaking of your victims, do you have their Soul Gems, still?"

You nod, here. A bit of rifling in your inventory, and you place them on the bench, in front of the Incubator. Three Soul Gems, glowing brightly, but slowly darkening. After a moment, you also plunk down Ayumu's Soul Gem as well, and Kyuubey nods in approval.

"I'll go ahead and take these. Mami has expressed an interest in talking to them, herself - she knows of what they did to that civilian. Needless to say she has a few choice words about the matter." There's a disturbing crunching sound as the scarlet teardrop emblem on Kyuubey's back seems to swallow up each Soul Gem as they're dropped onto it. "I'll make sure she doesn't get too carried away, as I'm sure you want to do most of the interrogating yourself. At least, with these three. As for Kasuga's, I'll have her restored to her natural state as soon as possible."

Right. Well. You have to hand it to the mutant cat, he's certainly responsible.

...Also, Mami's doing the interrogation? Oh, man. You almost feel bad for Lucius and her crew.

Almost, anyway.

"She never said anything to the effect, but she did express the desire to talk to them before you do. Rest assured it'll be done in the safety of a Silent Room, in case they try anything." It's here that Kyuubey opens his mouth to yawn - another feline trait, one he seems to have no trouble emulating at all. "After Kirishima Ruri dismisses you tomorrow morning, I expect you to report back to the Headquarters as soon as you can for your debriefing."

You don't have to have emotions to do what's frowned upon. For the contract, if it works, it works.

Favouring one class of girls (those of hopes and dreams) can also lead to efficiency increases - any organisation in complete harmony also will be slack; one needs some competition and rivalry to get things done. Also hopes and dreams are good things for an incubator to rest their laurels on.

Complete harmony is actually a good way to avoid despair, actually; if that harmony's matched together with victory.

People are in fact resilient things; they survive catastrophe effectively - people will adapt to loss of houses, loss of limbs, crippling injury, death of loved ones. They manage to get over it, for the most part.

What people don't get over, what causes despair, anger, upset; is repeated failure, failure that is rubbed in again and again in a dozen different ways. There are quite a few coping mechanisms for this, including blaming others for it, but overall it's a longer term repeated little defeats that really lead to falling into despair.

See: Sayaka and her cavalcade of failure, Homura nearly witching out in the last epsiode before Madoka steps in to save the day. See counterpoint: Mami going batshit crazy and shooting Kyouko in the soul gem before getting put down - note that she didn't in fact witch out herself.

...Yes, there is something. You remember something that Lucius had said, earlier, while you were beating the shit out of her and her goons. Something about remembering how many of them you killed. It sounds like a lead to you. Does he have any records of you getting on the wrong side of another Officio in the past? You remember Kharn telling you about what happened with you and the Third.

Kyuubey blinks at this. "Hm. That does sound like it deserves some looking into. Besides the incident that started it, there was also another that happened a few weeks after the Third transferred most of its contracts to me." He shakes his head. "You very nearly didn't survive that one."

What? Another incident? One you almost died in?

"I'll brief you about it some other time, Matsuda. Perhaps tomorrow. But I'll have someone look into your theory, see if it could lead to something." With that, he turns to leave again, but you stop him before he could take another step.

"Yes? Matsuda, we do have a timetable to adhere to, even now. Make it quick."

...You open your mouth to tell him about Wendy, but you close it after a moment. It's...no. You can't tell him, not now, not when you're not even sure if it was real or not. Maybe it was, and maybe, hilariously, you did sexually harass your dead ex in the middle of a field while you were half-delirious from blood loss. But you want to confirm it yourself, first.

Instead, you ask him if there's any chance that your procedure could make you see hallucinations, enough that they seem to be real. Even when they're not supposed to be.

"..." Kyuubey is silent for a moment, before nodding. "For a time, after Malal's death, Kharn went insane. Not in her usual, skull-collecting way that could pass for typical Eversor behavior these days, but in the way that she was useless to everyone. She locked herself in her own room, admitting no one in. The first week, all we heard from her was her crying for Malal. Begging her to return. Begging for her forgiveness. And more than anything else, crying about how she'd betrayed the one oath that mattered."

The Incubator pauses, here. "The next week, she stopped crying. We heard her talking to someone, despite it being a fact that she was completely alone, and without any means of communicating with the outside world. She even stepped out of her room for the first time, and walked down the corridor, as if nothing had ever happened, talking to someone beside her, even if there was clearly no one there. Did you know who she was talking to, Matsuda?"

Malal? You venture here.

Kyuubey nods. "Valnikov Kharn was hallucinating that Malal was still alive, walking beside her. It was unnerving, to say the least. We tried to convince her that Malal was truly gone, that she was simply delusional - but she was utterly convinced of it that she almost killed Tomoe Mami herself in the process. But she didn't, because the Malal in her mind stopped her, and reminded her of who she was. Omegon deactivated her Soul Gem the moment Tomoe Mami was clear, and we had her drugged and unconscious for another week before she woke up and asked to be able to mourn her best friend's death properly. We took that as a sign that she was back."

The Incubator lets out a sigh. "What I'm trying to get at, here, Matsuda, is that there is evidence that the procedure could have made you see a hallucination, one that might have been real enough, that you'd be convinced. I am not saying this is the unimpeachable truth, but merely the conclusion that has the highest probability of being true." He looks at you. "Did you see something after all, then, Matsuda? Would you tell me who it is?"

. . .Someone from your past who's supposed to be dead. You're...not too sure who she was, but she should be dead.

"Well, that clears it up a bit, then." Kyuubey nods. "The dead do not come back to life, Matsuda. A hallucination, nothing more. Put it out of your mind." It's here that he finally leaves, loping out of sight with remarkable alien cat speed.

You let out a sigh yourself, before sitting back down on the bench. You take one last drag from your dying cigarette, before letting it fall down onto the floor to be ground out of its misery with your heel.

. . .Fuck everything about this mission. And idols.

The concert formally came to close about half an hour later after that. Thankfully, no further incident occured - even during the bit where you had to escort Ruri out of the fan-choked stadium. Surprisingly - or not so surprisingly - you yourself were surrounded more than a couple of times, with hordes of fans screaming to get your autograph, or even get a photograph of you. Sayaka, Enishi and even Deepthroat had to physically hold you back from shooting a particularly-grabby fan who tried to steal your glasses.

In any case, you're back at the Hotel now, in Ruri's own suite, with the building secured once more. Kyuubey even sent over two more Vindicare squads to provide overwatch from the nearby buildings, just in case something came up again, or if Tojo Group decided to get back at you. Yoshitaka Mine, the representative you knocked out earlier, was reported to have been carried out by his goons just after the concert.

"Wah, that was the best concert I've ever had in ages!" Ruri is still glowing with praise, even after having bent your ear in the limousine ride on the return trip. "Everyone's saying that they've never seen such an awesome plug for an anime that's not even out yet!" She does a spin in her rather revealing underwear, here - the idol in the middle of disrobing for her bath. "I hope Green Green-sama's happy, wherever she is! I'm making her masterpiece into something legendary!"

...Yeah. Yeah, probably. You're just lounging at the couch, now, resting your aching, tired everything. You'll...probably get a bath after your client does. You just want to be clean for some reason.

Probably all the fucking dried blood making your costume stick to you, eh? That, or you're slowly learning how to upkeep hygiene like a fucking human being again.

"You think so, Chiaki-chan?" Ruri beams at you. "Haha, well, I really hope that's the case! If having actual Magical Girls duke it out like that during the song that's going to be playing during signature fight scenes doesn't get her pumped up, nothing will!" She punches the air with a novice's clumsy enthusiasm a couple of times. "Yah! Hyaah! Fuck your face PUNCH!"

...She really gets a bang out of this Magical Girl stuff, huh?

"I told you!" Ruri grins. "I love Magical Girls!"

You shake your head. Idols will be idols. She should get ready for bed, in any case. You'll be staying up for guard duty again.

"...Aww, really?" It's here that Ruri pouts. "Can't you grant me this one favor and sleep beside me, Chiaki-chan? I mean, we won't see each other ever again after tomorrow, right?"

She's not going to give that up either?

"Please, Chiaki-chan!" Ruri falls dramatically in front of you, bowing in the way peasants throw themselves at the mercy of samurai. "Just this one time, please!"

How do you respond?

[]Fine. Sure. Whatever it takes for you to shut up.
[]No.

No it was something bigger. Something that I basically freak the hell out over for like 20 minutes after it came together and was going to mention the possibility here. But I had a lot of shit to get done and forgot the bloody thing.

It was a really offhanded comment somewhere that meant something about pinky I think. I'll have to recheck later today.

The straight man is a stock character in a comedy performance, especially a double act, comedy sketch, or farce.

When his comedy partner behaves eccentrically, the straight man's response ranges from aplomb to outrage, or from patience to frustration. He will often also be found in sitcoms.

In the manzai comedy of Japan, the straight man is called tsukkomi.

I think I do

The shitstorm was because the vote was close and decu miscounted posts like

"Yeah, as I voted earlier, I agree that bringing Kyubey into timestop is a good idea (I have already voted and this is not an actual vote but I'm still voicing agreement again for that choice of action)"

as votes, and when someone checked the number of [x] votes it was noted that the vote of "don't take Kyubey into timestop" was actually the winner.

This is why the rules are "blah blah blah" is not a vote, and "[x] do blah blah blah" within 20 minutes does definitely count.

Decu can count votes after the 20 minutes if he wants to, but you only are guaranteed a vote if you vote before those 20 minutes.

You look down on the idol prostrating herself before you, begging for the privilege of sleeping beside you. You allow yourself to briefly consider it - it's not everyday that the most powerful idol in the world is actually begging you for a favor.

You grumble out your reply, and it's with abject shock that Ruri looks up, the motion of it quick enough that one of her stupidly-long twintails whiplashed up to very nearly smack you in the face.

"Eh?! B-but, Chiaki-chaan...!" The green-haired super idol wails in despair. "I just wanted to--!"

You're still sticking to what you said about this the last time, you tell her. Nothing is going to change your mind, and after what happened in the concert, nothing ever will.

...But just to shut her up about it already, you'll make a compromise. You'll sleep beside her, yes, but you'll be on the floor instead on the bed. There's probably a comforter somewhere in the suite you can unroll, or something.

"But that's not--" Ruri starts again, but you cut her off with a glare, one that tells her just how you've had enough of flighty idols and their horseshit. She falls silent momentarily, before pouting as she turns away. "...Okay. Fine. I don't like it much, but it'll do, I guess."

You nod at this, before jerking your head towards the suite's bathroom. She should start getting ready for bed.

"Y-yes, Chiaki-sama~!" Ruri obediently bounces up to her feet, her pout quickly replaced with her trademark cheeky grin - and you hear the door to the bathroom slam shut as she disappears into it. A moment later, and you hear the sound of the shower being turned on, along with Ruri singing the song she'd performed with Iori, earlier.

You let out a sigh here. Finally, some peace.

"Hey, Murderface!" Sayaka's voice calls from behind the door, followed by her barging in right through. From the looks of it, she's also ready for bed, freshly showered and slipped back into a nightgown. You don't see Blueberry Cheesecake Brownie on her, but you do see a combat knife strapped to her bare ankle. "How are you holding up? Do you need any more healing, or something?"

What? Is Sayaka actually concerned for you? Alright, who the fuck is the Callidus in front of you, and what did she do with your Equerry?

"Huh? But I'm not--" Sayaka blinks, before frowning. "...Wow. Really, Murderface? I just want to make sure you don't flatline the night before Mission End, in case I missed anything. Fuck me, right?"

...You're fine. You're just tired, you tell her. Tired of everything. You apologize after a few moments, and she grudgingly accepts it with a nod, before sitting beside you.

"You're going to get cleaned up, right? You've still got all that shit on you." She gestures to your bloody costume. You nod at this - you're just waitiing for the idol to finish bathing, and then you'll get your own shower.

"Ah, good. Thought you were gonna do the Girl A thing and sleep in it." Sayaka makes a face, before blinking. "Oh, before you fuck Ruri, get her to fill this out, first." She takes a manila envelope from somewhere behind her, and passes it to you. You blink before taking it. "It's a feedback response kind of thing. She has to grade you and stuff. Don't open it, she's the one supposed to."

Ah. ...And no, you're not going to fuck your client, for the last time. You're not Kharn.

'In any case, your further squirreling about the package reveals what looks like a small white envelope, unsealed. Inside is what looks to be a small wallet-sized picture of a girl with pink hair and crimson eyes, wearing a magical girl costume that was very, VERY familiar. It was obviously a self-taken photo, seeing as the girl was holding a smartphone up with one gloved hand - the other holding a sideways V sign with her fingers over her right eye. A forced smile on her lips.

You turn the photograph over, and you see something written at the bottom.

Was supposed to... but I'm guessing it's something like Godoka being unable to affect previous failed timelines, or universes where she's already dead.

Infact, I suspect she can't even really save the universe from her own witch. I suspect that what we got is actually a new stable time-loop resulting from the interaction of Madoka and Homura's wishes.

Homura delivers her shield to Madoka on Walpurgisnacht, and Godoka uses it to borrow the power of her incarnation in the next universe, which is enough to stop the witch in the current universe.

In the next universe, the cycle is repeated. again and again... until something breaks it.

Homura in each universe acts as Madoka's physical avatar... which is why she's granted the power of Godoka's bow.

You slap the envelope against your free hand a couple of times. You don't really remember Malal as well as you should. What does Sayaka remember of the last Equerry, anyway? Besides being uptight and shit.

"Huh. Oh, yeah, you don't, right?" Sayaka blinks at you. "Even though you three were pretty much inseperable half of the time. That kind of sucks, but...hmm." The blue-haired Eversor thinks for a moment here, her brow furrowing. Looking as if she's taking this very, very seriously.

"She's just...ah, well, I'll go right out and say it. She reminds me of a friend I had back then, years ago, back when I was still studying." She looks at you. "You know that kind of friend where even if everybody else seems like they're out to get you, that friend'll be there by your side, no matter what? The kind that won't stab you in the back, no matter how badly you fuck up?"

That sounds like some kind of friend.

"I had a friend like that once," Sayaka says, looking down on her hands clasped on her lap. "I won't bore you with my life story, Murderface, but Malal reminded me of her. ...Not that we were close and stuff, but it was like, she was that kind of friend for Kharn." She pauses here for a moment, looking at you. "I guess she was that person for you, too. I was...yeah, I was kind of jealous of you about that back then."

The Eversor looks back down, deep in thought. "She just paid a lot of attention to shit. Doesn't miss a single detail, whether it's organizing an Officio-wide celebration or a synchronized op involving ten squads. Rumor was it she wasn't really a Magical Girl under the Culexus suit, but a machine."

She shakes her head. "I don't know if I'll ever get to match up to that, Murderface. I fucking hope you picked the right choice."

You smirk at this, before shaking your own head. She shouldn't even think about that kind of stuff. You didn't pick her to be your Malal - you picked her to be your Sayaka. Someone who's not afraid to tell you what she thinks about things, especially about the potentially stupid shit you're about to do. Thinking about trying to live up to Malal, well - there's really no faster way to fuck herself up, really, and you're not ready to see Kyoko go through that kind of grief.

Besides, she's already catching up to Malal, if it's being a tightwad that's in question. She's probably halfway there already.

You get a punch in your arm for that, but also a rather embarrassed grin from the Eversor. "...Thanks, Murderface. I kind of needed that."

[+ 200 Sayaka Points!]

You shake your head at this. You didn't get to thank her enough for healing you, so this evens it out, at least.

"Yeah, I guess." It's here that she yawns. "Right, I'll go and catch some sleep. Enishi and Squad Hiryu's taking up guard duty again, so we can probably take it easy for now. I'll make sure to wake you up in case anything happens, though."

Right.

...By the way, her friend. Did she have a name, or what?

"I didn't get her first name, she disappeared before I could even bring it up. Last name's Kaneda, though." It's here that Sayaka levers herself off the couch. "Why? You know anyone by that name?"

...No, you shake your head. Not particularly. It doesn't ring a bell.

"Figures." Sayaka lets out a sigh. "I don't know where she is. Maybe she's overseas, maybe she's dead. I wish I could at least thank her for everything she's done for me." She sniffs here, a bit, before laughing. "Christ, listen to me. I never thought I'd tell you about that, of all people. Still, it...feels nice to talk about it." The Eversor looks at you, before nodding. "Thanks, Murderface."

Don't mention it, you tell her. And your name's Chiaki.

"Yeah, yeah. G'night." She leaves the room, closing the door behind her - just in time for Ruri to loudly proclaim that she's done, bursting out of the bathroom in an explosion of steam, towel cloth and blow-dried green hair long enough to touch the floor. You take your own towel - and the pajamas you'd used last night - and make for the bathroom without another word. Mulling everything you've learned, here.

...So Sayaka knew Malal before she became a Culexus? That's...well. The painful coincidence makes you cringe as you shower, meticulously scrubbing the dried blood and dirt off your body. If Sayaka finds out that she'd just spent her entire career serving beside her best friend and not knowing it, and also finding out that her best friend died without her being able to mourn her properly...even you can tell that'd wouldn't exactly be a good time. Malal - or Kaneda - must have known, and decided to keep quiet about it, instead.

You can't even fathom what kind of self-control that took, to resist the temptation, not to mention the guilt, of keeping your identity secret from everyone, including your best friend. It must have torn the Culexus apart.

You'll just have to make sure her secret's safe, then. Just like the photograph swore.

You finish your shower a handful of minutes later. You even used the hairdryer like Mami had taught you. You forgo setting your ponytail, letting your hair hang down your back for now, since you'll be sleeping how normal people sleep for the night.

Stepping out of the bathroom, you come upon the scene of Ruri straining to get your comforter ready. By that you mean, the idol trying her level best to pull the rolled-up futon out of the closet. You shake your head and help her do the rest.

"Haah! Thank you, Chiaki-chan! That comforter was a monster!" Ruri lets ou an exhausted sigh, dropping back down on her bed. You shrug at this, fluffing up the pillow that came with the comforter with both hands, before settling into your temporary sleeping arrangements for the night. Taking off your glasses and placing them on the carpet beside your comforter, on top of the Warmaster Cap. The Desert Eagle, of course, is in its holster underneath your pillow, and the bangles clasped around both your wrists, still.

"You'll be okay like that, Chiaki-chan?" Ruri calls from the bed. "Isn't the floor kind of hard?"

It's fine, you tell her. In fact, you're used to sleeping while sitting down more. Lying down's a bit of a luxury for you. You'll manage, however.

"...Hee. That's kind of cool." You hear the idol murmur. Some rustling of bedclothes, and it's here that you see Ruri lean over the lip of her bed to peek at you. "Hey, Chiaki-chan?"

What? You squint at her, frowning. You were trying to get comfortable already, for fuck's sake. Does she need anything or what?

"Oh, no. No, nothing in particular." Ruri smiles, here. "Just, uh..." The superidol seems to hesitate, here. "Do you think having a relationship with a Magical Girl can really work out?"

...Does it look like you're the goddamn expert at that kind of shit? Really?

"Honestly? From what I keep reading about? Yes! I mean, Green Green's just about admitted that you're the one she based Murder Mayumi on, plus there's all the stories I keep hearing..."

Just because it's on print doesn't mean it's true, you remind her.

"Well, just humor me! Just think that you're my big sister or something like that. What do you think? Or should I just, you know, hypothetically, if I was in the one in the relationship - should I just cut it off and go for a rich, normal guy instead?"

Actually, Idols really do have quite a lot in common with Magical Girls.

The difference is simply the nature of the contracts. Theoretically you can get out of being an Idol. Once you're in an incubators clutches, your fate is sealed and you're AAA fucked.

If our life expectancy wasn't in the single digits I would say yes. But that isn't the case. Those of us who manage to stay alive as long as we have, aren't the same kind of "person" that would fit into a normal healthy relationship. Not playing the wounded bird that needs healing card here, normal people cannot handle the shit a MG drags in. If that MG was any kind of decent, she wouldn't want to put it on anyone either.

[X] It's a terrible truth but the only people who should be around magical girls are other magical girls

We don't live like everyone else, we don't even get to retire like everyone else. Your life might be dangerous because of everyone wanting you but for us our lives are dangerous because everyone wants us dead.

If you aren't fighting some unknowable monster bent on killing innocent people you are fighting zealots or even just people who had the bad luck of drawing the same job as you but on the opposite side.

And this all comes back, to us a relationship is something that an enemy can exploit. So if you drag someone into this world then you are signing their death warrant, no matter how much you care, how much you vow to protect them it is eventually going to get them somehow

It hurts, but finding a nice rich guy and settling down comfortably beats the hell out of living a short life with a magical girl, no matter how much you love them and they you there is a cost for it, and it is too high for anyone who truly cares about another to pay

So yeah, probably a good idea finding a rich guy, you might even be able to buy yourself an island to live on or something

Big Sister? You don't even have a real sister, for fuck's sake. How can you even pretend to be one, when you don't know what it actually is to be one in the first place?

Well, there's Misaka, sure, but...

You grumble something underneath your breath, before you pull up the comforter's bedcovers up to your neck. Fine, you'll playing along. But first - who is it, anyway, that Ruri is so 'hypothetically' attached to? Maybe you know who it is.

"...Promise you won't tell anyone?" Comes the super idol's voice from the bed.

You snort at th is. Fine, if she's not comfortable sharing the name, then a brief description will do.

"A hero, Chiaki-chan." Ruri breathes this out into the airconditioned cold of the room. "She's...someone kind and strong and brave. She never thinks about herself or her safety - she just does the kind of thing you'd expect Superman to be doing, if he was actually real."

...What, like saving kids from burning orphanages and all that?

"Sort of." Ruri giggles here. "She just...does it. The rescuing thing, the saving thing. All the superhero stuff. And I don't think she's got an Officio like you, or all the other Magical Girls I've encountered. She always works alone, and she never takes any reward money or anything like that."

Sounds...well, remarkable. And a bit stupid, really.

"Is it, really?" The idol's tone of voice is pensive, here. Quiet. "Isn't she doing what Magical Girls are actually supposed to be doing, Chiaki-chan? Helping people, rescuing people? Protecting everyone's hopes and dreams?"

Only in anime and manga, you tell her. That shit doesn't fly in real life. It's never as simple at that.

"...And here I thought you'd actually think she was cool, too." Ruri sniffs, here. "You disappoint me, Chiaki-chan."

Well, you're going to disappoint her further, then. Because if she's asking you if it could work out, a relationship like that, with her and that superhero wannabe? Your answer is simple - it's not. One way or another, one of them is going to get hurt, and the other left alive will have to live with it the rest of their life. Nothing is worth that kind of suffering - she should just look for that normal guy with the deep pockets. At the very least, she'd be able to get a personal island out of the bargain.

"...Hmph. I also thought Chiaki-chan was going to say something different. I guess that's also disappointing." The idol sighs. "I'll...I guess I'll think about it. I'm probably not going to change my mind, though!" It's here that she leans over to look at you again. "And not a word about this to the media, okay, Chiaki-chan?"

Right. Fine. Now can you sleep, at least?

"Of course! Goodnight, Chiaki-neechan~!"

She ducks back out of view, and you glare at the spot where she'd only been a few moments ago. Shaking your head, you close your eyes and try to get back to sleep.

You open your eyes a moment later, and it's here that you remember to toss the manila envelope over the bed.

"Eh? What's this?" Ruri asks, confused.

Feedback response, you tell her. Something about her having to grade your performance throughout the mission.

"Really...? Cool! I'll fill it up tomorrow and give it to you just before we leave, is that okay?"

Sure. That'll be fine, you guess.

"Perfect! Now shutting down, running Sleep Subroutine 2.0!"

....What?

"Hahaha! Just kidding! Goodnight again, Chiaki-neechan!"

...Fucking idols. Seriously.

You close your eyes just as the lights are turned off - and you immediately fall asleep, dreaming about fallen angels with green hair the color of the devil's blood.

...At least you're getting decent sleep for once.

I'm guessing we are going to do some officio work for the next thread. Debriefing, picking out weapons for the next mission, asking our rank leaders about any leads, getting information from QB about what large groups of magical girls we pissed off, and most importantly, forming our party for the smash and grab.

I kind of prefer them, it was just the nature of this that was all wrong. First off, guard duty is tedious in real life, and that reflects in a quest, especially when it's for more than, say escorting someone from A to B over a day. Secondly, missions are always better with interesting interactions and intriguing characters, but a lot of different things made most of the characters here not as appealing or interesting as other missions I'd say.

Not to me. When that whole thing was brought to light imagine how it looked to the other girls of the third.

>Their Warmaster willingly let 3 squads and 100 of their comrades just die for the sake of some dark blood ritual for

The Blessed Lady
>They want to vent their anger, confusion, and frustration
>They find that Kharn is one of the Blessed Ladys chosen shortly after integration
>The wound of betrayal from their Warmaster is still fresh, they don't want the same thing to happen again
>Leads to the event that QB said almost got us killed
>They decide to lay low, but never let go of that hatred The Blessed Lady
>We become the prime target since we are basically the Blessed Lady's arbiter(shield maiden) and took part in slaying droves of their friends.

I can totally believe that there is some segment of the third that was able to find out the whole truth, and decided that they want nothing more than to entirely screw up w/e grand scheme Pinky has in the works. And feeling entirely justified in doing so.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/27/13(Sun)07:18 No.27966838

You are a Magical Girl, and you're seeing your latest client - the super idol known as Kirishima Ruri, of 2020 Productions - off as she flies to some far-off European country to inflict her own brand of shrill, ear-piercing, autotuned bullshit she calls 'music' on someone else.

No, you're not sorry to see her leave. You're not sorry for the next country she goes to, either. The farther away she is from you, the better.

No more idol missions. Ever.

Kyuubey will have to force you to do one again, or kill you trying.

>> ☐ Deculture 10/27/13(Sun)07:21 No.27966857

Unfortunately, she's not leaving just yet. Her flight isn't in an hour or so - a surprise, considering it's her own fucking private jet, and it's a very early flight (to avoid the paparazzi, Ruri reasoned). So you're waiting with her in the VIP waiting lounge at Mitakihara Airport, with Kyosuke's security detail stationed right outside to block anyone else from entry, from nosy fans to drunken executives. Sayaka's with Deepthroat to make sure no one fucks with the private plane as it's being prepped for flight, and Enishi, you think, is skulking around somewhere being invisible again.

This setup suits you just fine. Yeah, sure, it's too fucking early to be up - it's 6 in the goddamn morning, and you didn't get much sleep last night due to constantly waking up from the nightmare of seeing your client turn into a giant fucking spider thing - but hey, you're in the final hour or so of this assignment, which means you'll only have to stick around the idol for a few moments more. And you've got a drink in your hand, so there's that, too.

Sitting beside you on the bar is Ruri herself, in a relatively normal schoolgirl outfit, her hair tied into her trademark twintails - and she's sipping what looks to be a super-sugarcharged coffee shake while she pores over your feedback form.

...You can't believe you got through the last 48 hours without getting drunk even once. It's got to be some sort of record, or something.

"Mmmh. I was hoping we'd get to spend a few more days with each other, Chiaki-chan." Despite her enthusiasm to get ready earlier - she practically dragged you out of your comforter to get you ready - the idol doesn't seem to be all that eager to go, now. "I was hoping we'd do some shopping together, and there's still that date you owe me, too!" Ruri shakes her head, pouting.

This pouting, of course, lasts a few seconds until she grins again, cheekily. "But, haha~ I couldn't ask for anything more after last night! You were so wild and rough, like a beast~! I thought my heart, body and soul were going to give out!"

How do you react?

>Ruri's love is NANOHA. She has a GOLDEN WEAPON. She fights for LOVE AND JUSTICE and SHOT PINKY when she got her GW. She is also likely to be a ROGUE MAGICAL GIRL

>The Prophet is most likely MISAKA. Misaka has ALREADY PREDICTED THAT WE WILL END THE WORLD. However, she also BEGGED US TO DO IT BEFORE 'SHE' COULD, which implies that, if she is indeed the Prophet, she is UNAWARE OF THE DEEDS COMMITTED IN HER NAME. However, she also REACTED TO US MENTIONING PINKY, which heavily implies that SHE WAS THE ONE THAT TOLD PINKY WE WOULD HAVE TO KILL THE PROPHET (which would explain Pinky's strange behaviour). But, since 'Mami' is already dead, chances are that WHAT SHE HAD SEEN HAS ALREADY COME TO PASS. I hope.

You decide to keep quiet and keep drinking. No need to rise to the idol's bait. Besides, you've still got the most of a bottle of Kong to kill.

...No, you're not trying to get drunk. Not this early in the morning. You still have a debriefing to get to after this, after all. This is just something to take the edge off.

Yeah.

"Nothing?" Ruri leans towards you, beaming. "Not even a titter? Or a grumbled dismissal?" She draws back after a moment, giggling. "Aww, well, that's okay. It's really too early for that kind of thing, isn't it?" It's here that she yawns, herself. "Nngh...guess I'd better get on grading Chiaki-chan's performance, then!"

Yeah, she can do that instead of bugging you. Leave you to drink in peace.

The idol looks back down on the sheet of paper she'd been filling out, spinning a bright green pen with her free hand. "Alright! Efficiency, on a scale for 1 to 5, with 5 being the highest...5! Reliability...I'd say a 5, too! Adaptability, Responsiveness, Resourcefulness...all of them, 5! Cuteness...1!"

You very nearly spit out the mouthful of whiskey you'd been in the middle of swallowing. ...Cuteness?! What the fuck do you need to be graded on that for?

"Eh?" Ruri blinks at you. "Er...I don't know, Chiaki-chan, I'm just reading out what's on here. See?" She points at a particular item on the feedback form. ...And yeah, there is Cuteness there, and Ruri'd just encircled the 1 with a heart shape. Reading further, you also see some other bullshit items, like Sparkliness and Bubbliness.

What the fuck, Kyuubey? How the hell does being cute or being bubbly as shit figure into being able to protect someone?

"Hmm, well, I guess for some people, that's an important point?" The idol tries, pensive. "I mean, Magical Girls are supposed to be cute and all, with the sparkles and stuff..."

It shouldn't be in there! It's stupid! And did she have to give you a 1?

"I'm just trying to be honest about this, Chiaki-chan!" Ruri insists. "I don't fake this kind of thing, you know! Feedback's important, it lets the person know what they need to work on, and that's really important. I should know, I'm an idol, and my bread and butter depends on fan feedback!"

...She gave you a 1.

Ruri smiles here, nervously. "Um, well, Chiaki-chan, I'm sorry, but...well, you're not really cute, you know? B-but, um, you know! It really doesn't apply to you, anyway! I'm just marking you high at the ones that really apply, like, uh...Violence! Right! A big, juicy 5 for Chiaki-chan!"

You stare at her in silence, before shaking your head. Letting out a sigh and going back to your drink.

Idols.

Speaking of idols. You...you should probably do something about Iori. She didn't really show up again after she hugged you back in the dugout. Maybe you should try and see if she's okay.

Homura and Madoka are the heartbeat of the universe.

No Magical Girl is equal to her own Witch. Madoka cannot beat her own Witch form by herself.

However, Homura's wish to save Modoka is still in effect.

So, each cycle beyond the anime, Madoka continues to exist as a concept. And Madoka is saved from her own defeat by Homura bringing her Shield, and her Time Powers to Madoka

This is the brief moment when Homura and Madoka reunite. With the Shield, Madoka can tap into her increased power from the next Cycle, which is sufficient to allow defeat her Witch in this incarnation. Unfortunately, this takes both Madoka and Homura to yet another universe where the two must repeat the cycle again... a semi stable loop.

The "Wraiths" that Homura encounters are witch spawn from the universes in which Madoka previously failed to ascend & died, and as such where Madoka has no power.

Magical Girl Noir Quest takes place in a loop after which Homura has failed to deliver the shield to Madoka, resulting in Madoka having insuffient power to defeat her own witch, and resulting in the return of Witches to the universe.

Godoka would have to, given she embodies a universal law that erases witches. She would have to eternally win against her own witch for that law to exist. She cannot lose without interference unless willingly.

It would be like 'suddenly nuclear forces stop working like they should' for her to lose.

That's the great secret. Madoka can outright prevent the formation of every Witch... except her own, which must still incarnate at some point

But Homura's wish to save Madoka is still in effect.

I'm sure you love your shield story and would love to see it used and all, but the first thing Madoka did when she changed into Ultimate Madoka was annihilate her own massive witch. While Homu watched. Which she will keep doing as she told Mami when asked if she could keep fighting as magical girls' hope forever.

Happy writing.

It only works if Homura forces it to work, as it isn't a requirement of the wish itself.
Each time Homura used the reset functionality, she gave up on that loop, rewinding time and erasing those events from existence.

You just answered this yourself. Madoka was able to use her own massive powers from the next universe and annihilate her own witch because Homura was there.

In effect, the end of the anime represents the first completion of this new cycle.

But thats not how it goes, ya dingus!

Madoka`s witch wasn`t able to form because of Madoka`s wish that witches should not exist. But because of of size of her wish and the power it took to defeat Walpurgisnacht her Soulgem shoudl be draned and she should be a witch, except, like said befor,e he wish does prevent witches from existing.

This why Godoka came into existence. She is a being that by all means should be a witch yet is prevented by the laws of the universe to exist and this is also why Godoka cannot exist as Godoka. She is basically the personification of dividing by zero. Godoka exists because Kriemhild Gretchen is forbidden to exist by the rewritten laws of the universe.

That aid, there are some points that are never explained. Like, the theme of Meguca Meduca is to struggling with fate and trying to change that fate and Homura/Madoak partly suceed at this by changing the fate of all Magucas, yet Sallaka who is fated to turn into a witch every time still could not be saved.

You decide to send her an SMS message instead. It's...complicated between the both of you, sure. It's not that you hate Iori, you remind yourself. It's just better for her, and for everyone involved, that the both of you stop entertaining even the merest thought of being together. You already made that clear back in the coffeeshop, and you're not about to go back on everything that you said.

...Besides, calling her this early would just send the entirely wrong signal, here.

Pulling out your smartphone from your inventory with one hand and lifting your drink to finish it off with the other, you briefly consider just asking Ruri about Iori. That'd certainly be a hands-off approach, but...you did promise the idol that you'd still be friends with her. Friends are okay, you've got no problem with that.

Yeah, a message will be fine. She can reply to it whenever.

You tap out a brief message, asking her how she is, and apologizing for what happened last night. You tell her that you're okay yourself, you're just seeing Ruri off right now, and she doesn't need to reply if she doesn't want to. Just a heads-up if she's okay or not would be nice.

You place your smartphone on the bar's countertop, and hold your index finger over the SEND button. After a few moments, you press it, and a quiet beep announces that the deed is done.

You finally manage to let out the breath you've been holding, only to draw it back in again as you realize Ruri has been looking over your shoulder the entire time. Her lips very nearly brushing against yours when you turned to face her.

"Eh? Worried about Iori-chan?" The super idol blinks, grunting as you push her face away from yours with a firm hand. "Bwah, hey! From what I heard, she got back to 765 Productions alright. I had some of Kyojou-kun's guys escort them back too, just in case."

She frowns, here. "Well, I did hear she was crying the entire way back, but..." she shrugs. "Iori-chan's a big girl, she'll get over it. And she knows that you're a Magical Girl, so she knows you're not gonna croak that easily."

...You just wanted to make sure she was alright, that's all.

"Just make sure you don't start sending the wrong signals again, Chiaki-chan." Ruri's voice seems to have less of the grating cheerfulness it had earlier, taking on a more serious tone. "I mean, yes, someday she'll figure you out for real, Iori-chan's not dumb. But at least make it easy for her."

That's what you're trying to do.

...What does Ruri care, anyway? Isn't Iori from a rival production agency?

Ruri frowns here, before reaching out with a well-manicured hand and poking your forehead. "Because she's my friend, dummy! That's why I care! And while I love Magical Girls, I don't want people like Iori-chan getting into a relationship with one!" She shakes her head, drawing back. "Nothing personal, Chiaki-chan, but Iori-chan doesn't need that kind of grief. Yayoi-chan was enough--"

Ruri blinks as she's cut off suddenly by one of her own songs blasting out from somewhere - and she pulls out her smartphone. "O-oh! Please excuse me, Chiaki-chan, I won't be a moment!"

She slides off her stool and walks to one corner of the lounge, a bright smile on her face. Cheerfully and animatedly talking to whoever it was on the other end of the line. You watch her for a few moments, and you notice that the idol is already blushing. Like...well, like a schoolgirl. Obviously tickled pink by whatever her conversation partner's spouting.

Must be someone special, you think.

You let out a sigh, before refilling your own glass and starting the process of drinking it all over again.

The idol's right.

Iori doesn't deserve someone like you, nor the kind of grief you bring.

...Well, you already know that, anyway. You just need to make sure not to forget it.

The call for Ruri's flight came around the time that you were halfway through the bottle of Kong. You alerted the security detail, along with what remained of your squad, so the journey to the tarmac - where Ruri's private jet was waiting - was fully secured. You're not taking any chances here, not now.

With it still being early morning, the sun wasn't bearing down on everything just yet, and so both you and Ruri walked out to a chilly tarmac then. The faint sunlight glinting off the sleek body of Ruri's private jet - which, of course, is predictably decaled up to the fucking tailfins with its owner's image.

"Nice, isn't it?" Ruri grins, like a child showing off a favorite toy. "Got it after my first album went quintuple platinum!"

It's pretty nice, you agree. But did it really need the decals? It looks painful to ride in, really.

"Eh? Don't you think it looks cute?" The idol frowns. "Ah, hmm. Well, I guess it is time for a change...maybe something more Magical Midori-ish. I'll have Noriko-chan write it down!"

...Nevermind. Forget you said anything.

As you continue your approach approach, you spot Deepthroat doing her best to manhandle a particularly heavy-looking piece of luggage up the short flight of removable stairs leading up into the plane. Sayaka's helping out, but the assistant is staunchly refusing any offer of assistance from the Eversor. Her sweat already darkening the underarms and back of her light gray blouse.

Poor Noriko.

"Well, I guess this is it, Chiaki-chan!" The super idol pipes up again, stopping just shy of the first step of the stairs. She turns around to face you, smiling brightly. "I know you were really frustrated with me a whole lot during the past two days, and I bet you're still rustled, but I really had fun, and you're one of the only two people I felt really safe around!" She holds out her hand to you. "I'm really happy to have known you, Chiaki-chan!"

How do you say goodbye to Kirishima Ruri?

No. The SmashNGrab on the oil rig isn't scheduled for 4 more days.
There was supposed to be a recon team sent, but it apparently didn't make it into the requests we gave to Mami, so now would be a good opportunity to have the recon team check out the oil rig ahead of our insertion.

You reach out and shake the idol's offered hand. You weren't really that frustrated, when you consider it. Escort missions can typically be frustrating anyway, or at least that's how you remember it. And while you've had your disagreements, there's no hard feelings between the both of you.

...You probably won't be taking up any more idol missions after hers, though.

Ruri giggles at this, clearly pleased. "Haha~ Well, I guess that means all the other idols will have another thing to be jealous of me about! They won't be able to experiencing being in the same room with THE Ninth Warmaster!"

You're not too sure if that's anything to be jealous of, but whatever. It's also here that you ask her - with no small amount of difficulty - if she could stay friends with Iori. Be there for her when you can't. Keep an eye on her, and stuff.

Ruri blinks at this, before nods, her cheerful smile once more replaced with all seriousness. "Of course, chiaki-chan. You didn't even need to ask. I'll call her from time to time and see how she's doing when you can't, and I'll visit her all the time when I'm back here. Just so you don't worry about her too much when you're working. How about that?"

You nod at this, swallowing painfully. That'd...be nice of her, yes.

"See? I can be more than just an annoying bitch, Chiaki-chan!" She gives your hand a squeeze, smiling, before finally letting go. Behind her, you can see Noriko looking at you from the top of the stairs, while Sayaka made her way down. You wave at the assistant, and she shyly waves back.

"Everything's set. Did one last sweep, no bombs or anything of the sort on board." Sayaka reports as she reaches both you and Ruri. She turns towards the idol. "Um, well, Ruri-san, it's been a pleasure--"

"Sayaka-chan, thank you!" The idol's goodbye with your Equerry is decidedly much more friendly, with Ruri nearly tackling Sayaka to the ground as she hugs her. "I had a lot of fun with you as my Super Fan! I hope you stay as one forever!"

The Blueberry very nearly turned into a Strawberry, she was blushing that hard. "A-ah. Ruri-san, it was really nothing, and I...I've got no intention of stopping from being your fan..."

You let the idol and your Equerry say your final goodbyes as you light a cigarette, taking a long drag from it once it caught. A moment later, and it's here that you see Enishi running towards you, something clutched in her hands.

"Kirishima-san! Kirishima-san, please wait!" The Callidus Rank Leader calls, somehow managing not to trip and fall flat on her face, running in her kimono. She reaches the jet after a few moments, and takes another few to catch her breath.

"K-Kirishima-san, here's...um." Enishi gulps air, before straightening and holding out what looks like a jewelry box of some sort. Too big for a ring, but too small for a necklace. "My eldest sister sends her regards with this gift. She wanted me to give this to you personally, since she is unable to do it herself." She looks your way, before bowing. "Don't worry, Warmaster. I checked it out myself. It's clean, it's just a gift. And it came with my sister's personal seal, and I verified it myself with her."

Ah. Right. Sure, that's fine.

"Oh, is that right, Enishi-chan?" Ruri lets go of Sayaka to receive the gift. "Please send my thanks and my regards to your sister, uh..."

"Vintage, Kirishima-san." Enishi assists.

"Vintage-chan!" Ruri finishes brightly, before blinking. "Uh...Vintage? That's kind of a weird name, isn't it...?" She opens the gift box, and blinks. "W-whoa! This is....this is pretty weird! Cute, but weird!"

"You're not the first to take note, Kirishima-san, I assure you." Enishi's smile is audible, before it's replaced with curiosity. "Eh? Isn't it some sort of brooch, Kirishima-san? I didn't open it myself, just scanned it to make sure it wasn't anything harmful--"

All three of you crowd around the idol, trying to sneak a peek at what she was given.

Surprisingly, Sayaka was the first to recoil, shrieking and backpedaling away.

"WHAT THE EVERLIVING FUCK THAT'S A COCKROACH! WHO THE FUCK GIVES ANYONE A FUCKING COCKROACH HAIRPIN?!"

You blink down at the revealed gift. It's a jeweled hair brooch, silver with gold accents, and rubies for eyes - resting in a rich velvet inset. Its body is leaf-shaped, bulging out at the middle and terminating into small points on either end, and made up of segments. It's got small feet, and a pair of antenna curling up and back over its body.

...Yeah. It is a cockroach, all right. Weird.

"Oh, stop saying that! It's not a cockroach!" Ruri chides the both of you. "It looks more like a cute pillbug!" She delicately lifts it out of the box and sets it onto her hair. "How does it look?"

Like a big silver cockroach is shitting in her hair, you tell her. She pouts at you for this.

Sayaka merely goes a sickly green color and averts her eyes, clearly not at all at home with Ruri's new look.

"Actually, it's more of an isopod--" Enishi tries to point out, but it's here that Noriko calls meekly for Ruri, saying that they need to go.

"Oh, alright, I'll be there, Noriko!" Ruri replies, before turning back to you and your group. "Goodbye, Chiaki-chan, Enishi-chan, Sayaka-chan! Let's meet again sometime!" It's here that she hands you the brown manila envelope you gave her last night - your feedback form. "Here you go, with my compliments! Ah, don't look at it, just give it directly to Kyuubey!"

And with that, the idol runs up the stairs to her own private jet. A moment later, you watch as the painfully-decaled flying machine hurtles into the sky. Unexploded. Intact. Safe.

...You could probably blow it up from here, still, you figure.

"That's that." Sayaka shakes her head, one hand raised to shade her eyes from the sun. "Your first mission as Warmaster officially done, for all intents and purposes, Murderface." She turns to you, patting her gloved hands together, a relieved smile on her face. "All that's left is the debriefing, and I can probably do that later after I go home and have a nice long bath, and--" The Eversor stops, blinking at you. "Murderface, you asshole, you were thinking about shooting that plane out of the sky, weren't you?"

What? No. Not at all. ...Well, maybe a bit, but you weren't going to follow through or anything.

"Idiot." Sayaka punches you in the shoulder, a half-hearted one. "But at least you didn't actually do it, so that counts for something." She lets out a sigh, before looking at you and Enishi in turn. "We done here, then? We're dismissed?"

You nod. Pretty much done.

"I'll have Squad Hiryu pack up and get ready to get back to Headquarters." Enishi bows deeply in front of you. "Thank you for allowing me the pleasure of fighting alongside you, Warmaster. Please remember me should you require the services of a Callidus next time, although..." she shakes her head as she straightens up. "I also realize that last night wouldn't have been as horrible if I were only better at my job."

You will, you tell her. And no, she did help getting all of Lucius' team mates rounded up. Everyone in the stadium was saved thanks to her.

"Still, I need to meditate upon my mistakes." Enishi bows again. "I will take my leave, then. Warmaster. Miki."

I'll just say that Lucius and her freaks just slipped us one, because of the audience and all." she looks at you. "You'll say the same, right? Karasawa can inhale an entire wheelbarrow of dicks, but she tries her best."

Yeah, that's obvious. You'll try not to point fingers. Everything still worked out anyway.

Sayaka nods at this, as if she'd expected you to reply the way you did. "Anyway, I'll go on ahead. Kyoko's already waiting for me back at the apartment, and I need to cook her breakfast before she wakes up." She nods at you again, as if to salute. "Later, Murderface."

I got two rounds off, hitting the guard in the shoulder, and the fucking Beretta jammed. Again. That pistol was trying to kill me. Not for the first time, I cursed the fact that my place as my team's only Vindicare prevented me from carrying an M4/203.

I dove to the floor and rolled behind a desk, scrabbling for my combat knife. I looked up just in time to see one of the security goons point an AK-47 at my squad leader, Freon, and unload. One of the rifles was lying a few feet away, and I launched myself towards it. Just as I scooped it up, the goon's head exploded, and my ears started ringing. I looked up at Two-Hands, our CQB specialist, standing over me with an AK raised. I scowled at my grinning squadmate, who pulled me upright and handed me the rifle.

"Here ya go." She flicked blood off her visor. "Shoots a little high."

"You always such a smartass, Two-Hands?"
"You always such a pussy, Pawn?"
Goddammit I hate that nickname.

"Hey, Rev, lay off. It's her first run." Linde Van Dyke, who we all called Freon because of her temperament when under fire, pulled her helmet off and shook out her short blue hair, then walked over to stand in front of the window, stepping carefully over the bodies. The redhead beside me gave her a New York salute, but shut up. "Now, Tanya. What did we learn here?"

"That Syrian government officials have shittons of low-quality mooks in every fucking building with a decent line of sight to their offices." I had retrieved my pistol and was working to clear the jam. I gave it up with a sigh. "And that my Beretta is worse than a fucking Nambu."

"HEY! You hatin' on Berettas over there?" Rev gave us a belligerent glare, hands resting on her holstered pistols.

Freon winced. "Well, at least with these we don't have to worry about the blast radius. But yeah, get rid of the standard-issue shit ASAP." She gestured at the Kalashnikov cradled in my arms. "That right there is the best sidearm a sniper can have." She spent a moment inspecting her armor, ensuring it hadn't been damaged by the doomed security officer.

Revecca "Two-Hands" Chang grinned. "Yeah. And thank fuck all these towelhead Syrian assholes carry so much ammo. It's nice to cut loose for a change."

A burst of static came over my helmet radio, followed by my spotter's voice. "Visual. Target is leaving the office." Sonja Zaitsev had a quiet, pleasant voice despite her heavy accent, and hearing her talk never failed to calm my nerves.

Freon snapped her helmet back into place.
"Alright, ladies, you heard Zero. Ammo up and camo up. Pawn, go ahead and set up by the window. Make sure there's no direct sunlight on the barrel. Rev, with me."

I acknowledged the order and stowed the AK, unpacking my rifle from its case. The big Anzio 20mm may be a bit impractical for normal forces, but it works just fine for me. It also doesn't leave anything for the medics to save, a point Jyuro stressed when he designated it - and me - for this op.

"One last thing, Tanya. Abbadon has said she'll be personally keeping track of the developing situation here. Don't miss."

Shit. Warmaster Pavlovena was personally watching this? As in, was going to personally chew my ass out if I froze up again?

I nestled the butt closer against my armored shoulder and keyed my mic. "Freon, I'm good to go."

"Good. Ah, wait one." She sounded distracted. "We have a slight...complication."

Double shit.

"What kind of complication?" I hoped my voice didn't give away how nervous I was.

Sonja cut in. "The target isn't alone. He's got some woman and a kid with him."

I found the target - a middle-aged man with a salt-and-pepper beard and thick glasses - on the other side of the crowded street. Sure enough, a woman walked behind him, holding a little girl's hand.

Rev growled. "The fuck is this, 'Bring Your Kid to Work Day?' Who planned this?"

"That would be me." A new voice cut into the channel, an amused, accentless alto we all recognized as belonging to the Warmaster - Sofiya Pavlovena, known outside the Officio as Abbadon. "Is there a problem, Two-Hands?"

I could almost hear Rev grinding her teeth on the other end. "Extra targets means complications. Complications mean problems. Problems mean dead Sparklies."

"An unfortunately unavoidable complication, Two-Hands. The good Secretary takes his family to work with him every day - Intel thinks it's to ward off assassins."

Freon broke into the channel. "Why weren't we briefed on this?"

"Because it isn't relevant. The presence of a woman and child will not prevent you from carrying out your mission..." She paused. "Unless, of course, you're worried about missing so badly you hit them instead?"

My squad leader's voice remained admirably calm. "I'm not the one holding the rifle, Warmaster. Jyuro assigned us the newbie. Pawn. And it's not about the possibility of hitting them - you've seen her scores; Pawn could shoot the fuzz off a gnat's arse at 700 meters. It's just that I'd rather not risk it."

"Well, then, let me put it differently." Abbadon's voice was flat and matter-of-fact. "Secretary al-Sharif dies today, one way or another. The Prime Minister was very clear - he wants this done before the elections. That means today. I have a strike package inbound, in case your team is for whatever reason incapable of finishing the mission. Weapons release in one minute."

Freon sounded outraged. "You did this deliberately, didn't you? You're testing Pawn."

The Warmaster laughed, a cold, humorless sound. "Everyone gets tested, Linde. You should know that. If she won't kill for the Officio, she has no place in the Officio."

"But-"

"There are no buts, Linde. Either she takes the shot, or everyone on that street dies when the strike package gets in range."

"I'll do it." I had stayed quiet, tracking the target, listening to my squad leader's borderline insubordination. Now, I resettled my rifle, and began a series of slow, deep breaths.

Freon's voice was very quiet. "Tanya, you don't have to do this. Let me take him out. Hell, let Rev do it. You don't have to kill him."

"I'm not killing him." Breathe in. "I'm removing a threat to peace." Breathe out. "And I'm saving the lives of everyone on that street."

Breathe in.

Hold it. Steady.

The recoil came as a surprise, just as it was supposed to.

Abbadon spoke quietly, almost reverently. "Tanya Gabrielle Synclair has joined the Sixteenth Officio. Long may she serve."

"Long may she serve." My squad echoed their Warmaster's words, and my first mission as a Puella Magi ended.

"Squad Davin, return to the Hand of Vengeance for debriefing. The Israeli Prime Minister has granted us permission to land an Osprey in the Golan Heights, in the Gamla Nature Reserve. That's your transport out."

"Acknowledged, Warmaster. We're moving now." Freon sounded exhausted, and somewhat depressed. "Pack up, ladies. We're going home."

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/28/13(Mon)09:18 No.27985185

You are a Magical Girl, and you're about to give your boss a debriefing about the last mission you just wrapped up moments earlier.

It's strange, actually. Yes, you had the option of going back to your apartment and getting some actual sleep, sleep without worrying if you'd suddenly find a giggling, green-haired idol trying to get fresh under your blanket. You also had the option to go directly to Charles', to unwind the only way you knew how (and also your favorite way). But you chose to go ahead and get your debriefing done and over with instead. Much better to do it now rather than wait till later.

Sayaka would've been surprised if she found out. Mami would've been impressed. Kyoko would've grinned, nudged you in the ribs and teased you about worrying about timetables and shit like that. Turning into a watch-wearing dildo.

...It's not really that, is it? You just want to get this shit over with, after all. The less you have to do with the last 48 hours, the better. Besides, after this, you'd have enough time to talk to Mami about what she learned from the rogue Magical Girls you rounded up last night. And then there's the upcoming mission to prepare for, you still need to get the intel about the off-shore facility you're going to be sent to steal something from. Not to forget about your dinner date with Midori too, and--

...FUCK. You ARE turning into a watch-wearing dildo.

Jesus Christ, things were really much more simpler before you got this goddamn hat to wear.

>> ☐ Deculture 10/28/13(Mon)09:20 No.27985193

>>27985185

In any case, you're currently at Headquarters, in the waiting area outside Kyuubey's office. The receptionist's desk is currently empty - it seems like Mami hasn't clocked in yet, or probably already out on business, you're not sure. In her place, however, was a monitor screen turned to face visitors, and it had come alive the moment you came in, displaying Kyuubey's usual impassive face.

He greeted you easily enough, after getting over his surprise of you reporting in so early. He asked you to wait, as he seemed to have company over. ...Tense company, from the way he sounded, but company nonetheless.

The monitor blanked out after he told you that he'd send for you once his affairs with the visitor is settled. It's been an hour since then, and you've spent that hour checking your Shield. Checking to see if it was clicking incessantly, a sign of the eldritchian nightmare inside being a bit prissy, or if you could use the only ability that'd been your one trump card before you suddenly got saddled with weapons forged from pure insanity and hate.

Nothing. Not even the quiet ticking of the mysterious, gear-infested mechanism within that was a soothing comfort whenever the world did its level best to kill you. Your Shield was silent, cold and dead.

It could turn, sure, allowing you access to the mysterious second inventory that you got Tiny Pete from, and where you stashed an entire wing of jets into - but any further than that and the mechanism inside locked fast and locked hard. It took you a lot of grunting and pushing to get it back to its prior position.

It's like we were either really good at collating data through multiple timelines or were significantly practiced at carrying out investigative/bureaucratic work something!

>>27985193

You were about to try again - contemplating smashing the shield itself into the wall nearby, just to dislodge whatever it was that was sticking inside the gears that blocked you from accessing your ability - when the monitor came alive once more, showing the face of your incubator. And yes, you're well aware that facial expressions aren't something mutant cats are any good at, but this time, he looked...well, frustrated. Resigned, maybe. Just a bit of angry, too.

"Come in, Matsuda." Kyuubey had said, in a tired sigh. "But before you do, please remember that I do not tolerate gunfire in my office."

The monitor switched off before you could ask what was that about. Gunfire? Was he worried that you were going to shoot him again? You've curbed that habit a long time ago, but he's just probably trying to play it safe, you guess.

You step through the double doors, and blink as you realize that Kyuubey's visitor is, in fact, another Incubator. One with the same smug expression as him, the same round crimson eyes - but where Kyuubey was all white, this was nearly jet black all over, with only the fur covering its head and face the same hue as pure snow. The teardrop insignia tattooed on Kyuubey's back instead imprinted on its forehead, between its eyes.

"Brother, let me introduce you to my Warmaster, Chiaki Matsuda." You hear Kyuubey say, with no small amount of pride. "Matsuda, allow me to introduce you to my brother, the Tenth."

The Tenth? Here?

How do you react?

...Well. Now you know why the mutant cat reminded you. If he hadn't, you'd probably have immediately drawn whatever firearm you could get your hands on and shot the little bastard to pieces as soon as you set your eyes on him. Yes, your memory may still be a little spotty with what happened back then at Siberia, but you remember enough to know that most of it came down to the fucker being butthurt about you keeping Midori for your own.

Midori's yours, you remember telling him, in no uncertain terms. Midori's yours, and you're not giving her up. If he thinks he's still got claim over her, then he can go fuck himself.

What name did you call him again? You remember calling him something, again and again on that computer screen, the Incubator ending up so flustered about it that you could taste his frustration in his typewritten words. Granted, it was a completely different you back then, and your memory of that time was strange in the sense that it felt like viewing a fuzzy camera recording of the events, rather than an actual experience - but some of it you could remember clearly. This wasn't one of them, but the nickname was so good, you'd feel really bad if you forgot it.

Dickbutt...? Was it dickbutt? It's dickbutt, isn't it?

It's here that both Kyuubey and the Tenth seem to bristle at the same time. "Now, Matsuda," Kyuubey starts, a warning tone in his voice. "I realize my brother has made certain decisions in the past that he must answer for, but there's really no call in tainting your first meeting in person with vulgar, puerile insults."

Huh?...But you didn't say anything. What the hell are they talking about--oh. Huh. You must've been thinking out loud. That's...well. You weren't planning on doing that, honest.

"I'm sure." Kyuubey lets out a sigh, here, before turning back to the Tenth. "Younger brother, please forgive Matsuda. She's just wrapped up a rather large assignment only a few hours ago, and she's had little chance to rest as it is. I'm sure she didn't mean to call you that, she..." Your Incubator stops as he sees you raise your hand. "...Yes, Matsuda?"

You lower your hand, and nod towards Jyuubey. Yes, you didn't mean to call him Dickbutt then, but you mean to do so, now.

"I don't think that--" Kyuubey tries again, but you cut him off. Turning back to Jyuubey and saying the word with as much venom as you possibly could deliver with your gravelly, deadpan voice.

Dickbutt.

Both incubators bristle again, as if on cue, and your Incubator is visibly more irritated now. "Now, Matsuda, see here--"

"It's fine, older brother." It's here that you realize that Jyuubey's been staring at you all this time - and that his voice, which you hear in your mind for the first time, sounds weedy and nasal, as opposed to Kyuubey's calm yet professional tones. The same sort of voice used to complaining and whining.

"It's no surprise that someone who takes after the Betrayer so much has no concept of common etiquette. I do hope you'll take this as yet more proof that you have made the wrong decision - again - in choosing who to lead your Officio." Jyuubey shakes his head. "A poor replacement for Tomoe Mami. Now, if there's someone more deserving to lead the Ninth Officio, it's her."

Ho. This little fucker's just baiting you now, isn't he?

"Tomoe Mami recommended Matsuda, and lobbied for her election." Your mutant cat of a boss replies before you could react, here. "I've no mind to seek a replacement, or keep the position unoccupied any longer. Whatever deficiency you think Matsuda may have, rest assured she is working to address them to become the Warmaster I chose her to be." Kyuubey's tone of voice, then, had never sounded colder. "And besides, you could hardly blame her. Sending an agent of your own over to disrupt her vacation?"

Jyuubey sniffs, clearly offended. "I merely wanted to retrieve my Callidus in a peaceful, amiable fashion. Even after she attacked my agent - without provocation nor justification, I may add - I tried again a second time, thinking that she might listen to reason after getting her pound of flesh." The Incubator shakes its off-hued head mournfully. "Instead, I am grossly insulted, humiliated, and deprived of yet another agent. Another one, on top of the one you helped her steal, older brother."

A clicking of its tongue, and Jyuubey turns its impassive gaze at you.

"Perhaps I can reciprocate by stealing one of your agents, then, older brother? Someone important to your staff, like the one-eyed scarlet one? Or maybe Mami Tomoe herself? I wonder, how would that go?"

...The little bastard's looking at you, as if daring you to react.

What do you do?

Constant threat of immediate Witch out or Soul Gem destruction, having her paired with a more loyal agent with a killswitch, and assuming direct control.

Besides, he's not doing it to gain an asset, he's doing it to deny us one. It's basically a threat to take Kyouko or Mami and force us to kill them because he'll direct control them into fighting us like he did with Mirai. And even if we take them down non-lethally, he'll remotely self-destruct the Soul Gem via Witch out.
That doesn't require them to be willing at all.

Firstly by the wording of the Kyuubey's first initiation of the recontracting, he was able to recontract midori to him.

Kyuubey himself says he despises the witch out and direct control clauses and so our girls don't have them. His wording was vague enough that he might not have been able to alter clauses, only contractorship. Thats one reason why we actually need to check with him if the clauses are still active with Midori.

If this remains true, Jyuubey may get the kidnapped magical girl without the clauses he needs to exert direct control except the direct kill switch by being paired with one of his own.

Then again if he attempts to pull a stunt like this, I'd like to see the resources he'll need to expend to capture someone on Kyoko or Mami's skills alive. The killswitch owner had also better be a damn special magical girl to not die within a few strikes from them.

You decide to keep quiet, here. No provocation your ass, the little bastard knows EXACTLY what went down in Siberia. You don't need to remind him, nor does Kyuubey need you to spell it out for him either.

So you stay quiet, merely returning Jyuubey's unblinking stare with one of your own. Breaking your silence momentarily only to ask Kyuubey if this is a bad time for you to be here, and if it's possible for your debriefing to be held at a later time. As if Jyuubey hadn't just tried to bait you into snatching him up off of his seat, smashing him into the floor and then stoving his face in with your heels.

"It's fine, Matsuda. Stay here. My brother was just about to leave when I called you in. We'll have your debriefing in a few moments." He then turns towards Jyuubey. "Younger brother, while I understand that you handle your own Officio differently--"

"Of course I do," Jyuubey snaps. "And clearly in a much more superior way to yours, older brother. You coddle your agents like children, even more than your vaunted Officio system forces us to." It's here that the nasal voice of the Tenth gains a sneering edge. "Do you consider them your daughters now, older brother? Do you consider yourself their progenitor? Or is that your insanity coming to the fore once more, like it did back then?"

Kyuubey is silent at this, his face coldly impassive, and it's a while before he answers. When he does, you could hear the note of derision in his voice, despite it being as cool and as collected as always.

"...I was just about to say, younger brother, before your interruption, that while I have always admired how headstrong you are, as well as your frank way of speaking. But as far as trying to provoke Matsuda here, as well as contemplating stealing one of my own agents...I would at least remind you that you came to me for assistance, dear brother. And I am giving it, despite everything."

He pauses here, his bushy tail flicking leisurely from side to side behind him. "Please do not try my patience, or my loyalty to my kindred. Unless, of course, you wish to see more proof of how insane I actually am."

Jyuubey had broken his stare from Kyuubey only halfway through his speech, listening to the rest with his head bowed and eyes downcast, seemingly contrite. Silence passes for a few moments before he finally replies, in the tone that reminded you of a freshly-scolded child. "...My apologies, older brother. The matter with the Prophet has set me on edge."

"A matter that Matsuda handled for us last night." Kyuubey turns to nod at you. "Ably and with little in the way of casualties on all sides - including yours, if I remember correctly." Your Incubator sounds amused, now.

"Indeed, but Yoshitaka Mine--" Jyuubey tries, glaring at you again.

"--is alive, with both his kneecaps intact." Kyuubey cuts in. "Which, I assure you, is a miracle after encountering my Warmaster. Your stolen client is safe, your revenue stream remains intact, and you do not have to expend energy to reconstitute a body for an agent casualty. Am I right, younger brother?"

More silence, and Jyuubey bows low here again, properly cowed. "...Yes, older brother."

"Good." Kyuubey nods. "I'll consider this matter settled. Now, forgive me, dear brother, but I need to attend to my Warmaster now. You and your Warmaster may see yourselves out. A car should be waiting for you outside to drive you to your destination." Kyuubey's chair swivels around with a whir of servos, making him face the array of screens in front of him. Signifying that his meeting with the Tenth is all but done.

"..." You watch as Jyuubey glares at the back of Kyuubey's chair, as if about to say something particularly venomous - but seems to think better of it, hopping off of the chair it was perched on and trotting towards the double doors.

It's also here that you realize that a Magical Girl was also with Jyuubey - except she'd been conveniently out of sight. She'd been standing a few ways off from the doors themselves, so still and quiet that you'd have mistaken her for a statue, or part of the background.

She had white hair, that was for certain, half-covered by a black beret worn on a rather severe angle. Her costume resembled something like a napoleonic general would wear, complete with epaulettes and badges and medals. A stiff riding crop slept on a sling around her waist,her legs and feet covered with thigh-high black leather boots. A monocle, perched upon her nose, shone from her right eye.

...You didn't even notice someone in the same fucking room as you? You probably need that break more than you thought, goddamn.

You watch her open the double doors for Jyuubey, holding them open before slipping through herself - but not before shooting you one last glare. You'd have returned it, but the doors quickly closed behind them.

"...I apologize you had to see that, Matsuda." Kyuubey lets out a sigh. "It's always taxing whenever I have to deal with my brothers - and with him, especially." Another sigh. "What am I going to do with him, I wonder?"

How do you respond?

...Well, if he's asking you, then you tell him about a certain human saying: that if you give someone enough rope, eventually they'll hang themselves. Also, the one you heard during a Western movie - something about a leopard changing his shorts.

Kyuubey is silent for a moment, his eyes locked to the screens in front of him, the round crimson orbs reflecting the scrolling information on expensive backlit LCD. "Matsuda, while I do appreciate how rare this situation is - your trying to actually help me with my problem regarding a recalcitrant brother of mine - I fail to see the relationship between fratricide by hanging, and forcing a member of the Felidae family to change his underwear." A moment of silence. "Or is this your way of trying to lighten the atmosphere with a joke or two? Because as fanciful as the connection is, I don't find it amusing at all."

What? N-no. No, you weren't making a joke. You were just pointing out--

"I know, Matsuda. I was feigning ignorance as a joke of my own. I understand what you mean." Kyuubey turns to look at you for the span of a single heartbeat, before turning back to his work. "I guess it failed to amuse you, too?"

Yeah. It wasn't that funny.

"Alas." Your Incubator lets out a sigh. "Jyuubey is so hard to deal with, sometimes. Very mercurial. One moment he's your dutiful little brother, who wants nothing more than to please you - the next he's your worst enemy, accusing you of everything from treason to sabotage. It gets tiring fast. Even the Seventh, the kindest of us all, has a strained relationship with him at best."

Another sigh. "Simply leaving him alone to his own devices, and striking once he's lost everything...it smacks of treachery, and of the worst kind. It is very tempting, though, if only to remove a constant source of stress." He shakes his head. "Still, he has his contractees to take care of. I will not deprive them of their Incubator, unless I have absolutely good reason to."

Well, why not just assimilate his contractees into the Ninth, just like how he did with the Third? Isn't there some higher authority Kyuubey can appeal to, to ask permission for that kind of thing?

"You mean the First?" Kyuubey asks. "...no, such concerns are below my oldest brother. We are autonomous, a Officio to their own, and we rarely bother him with our petty squabbles unless he himself interjects." It's here that he shakes his head again. "And that kind of expansion...there is such a thing as contractee bloat. If I am to destroy my younger brother, I will have to reave his Officio clean of life, down to the last girl. And Mitakihara ill needs another bloodbath like that."

It's here that his chair swivels around to face you. "Ah, listen to me, Matsuda. Bringing family problems into business." He lets out an annoyed grunt. "Let's start over. Matsuda, I asked you to debrief me on your mission with Kirishima Ruri, right?"

Yeah. It's why you're here.

"Very well. Please begin. Try to be as concise and as accurate as you can. The information you give will benefit the Officio."

How do you describe the events of the last 48 hours to Kyuubey?

No, Ribbon Homura is Primary Homura.

We're some kind of bizarre Mirror Homura, based largely on the fact that we're left-right inverted. We apparently have some kind of connection to Prime Homura though, given that she was one part of our psyche in our Siberia Barrier. [x] Idol mission was routine for the most part.
One attempt from the Tojo group engaging the principal, turned away.
One attack on me in the stadium, holding the crowds hostage with suicidal magical girls. Claiming to be on a rogue group working with the Prophet, and the Tojo group was nominally involved with them, supplying them with information but disavowed them once they realised it was a setup of a terrorist attack.

Took them down with help from the backup teams. Interrogation would probably give more info on the Prophet and what those crazy bitches were about. They claimed responsibility for the dead girl dressed up like Mami.

No more idol missions from now on. And I think I'll avoid protection gigs if I can.

She was irritating, manipulative, and horrifyingly effective at achieving her goal.
The Tojo Group attempted to coerce her into signing over to them. Ruri herself stated that any idols that do sign such a contract quickly find themselves married off to corporate executives. I believe the implication there is that the Tojo Group is operating a sex slave ring, focussed on flavour-of-the-month idols, whom they sell off for good once they fall pregnant. Perfect business partners for the Tenth.
And then there was that idiot 'reporter', calling herself NECO, that Sayaka seems intent on protecting. She's assured me that NECO will no longer be an issue, but I really doubt that."

Key points:

>Day 1

Discovered that Sayaka is a big fan of Ruri Kirishima's work.

Kirishima appears to have been approached by the Tojo Group to work for them. Seemed very adamant about not getting involved with them; however, the Tojo group managed to get Yoshitaka Mine in the hotel to talk with Kirishima, despite the hired security at the entrance.

The hired security may have been enthralled or otherwise incapacitated momentarily by magical means. This may be related to Lucuis' involvement with Yoshitaka Mine, as learned in the interrogation on Day 2.

Learned that there was an incident involving the death of a Kirishima fan. Apparently, this fan looked almost exactly like Ruri Kirishima, but was claimed by another family before an investigation could be launched. Do you know anything about this?

>Day 2

Interrogated Yoshitaka Mine. He might have had involvement with the meguca Lucius in the past, but wanted out as soon as he learned her true intentions.

Everything else you know about already.

I would certainly recommend investigation into their ties, after I nicely packed them up for you - I'd imagine they originated from the dissolved third, or maybe went rogue individually, but their associations in the time between then and now would be very important to know.

Dealing with them proved rather simple, as their leader was, quite honestly, a single-minded idiot. Personally I mostly stalled them then beat them up once I got the clear, I believe the other girls could tell you more about the operation in detail, especially our dependable callidus."

“You saw it? You saw the sacrifice yourself?” The dark-haired girl tittered across from me. …She hadn’t shut up since we sat down for coffee together. Her name was...Himiko something or other. The self-styled Shrine Maiden of the Golden Lady, my contact in Mitakihara, and yet another pain in my ass. …I tried to explain to her I was sitting in the stands, but she wouldn’t hear of it – it just made her talk more, and louder.

“Was it glorious? Did-did the screams fill the stadium? Were the people there awed by Her-“ Jesus Christ, kid, have you never heard of subtlety? I cut her off before she could go off on another tangent, and she deflated in her seat, staring out the window instead.

…I took a sip of my coffee. Black. Probably not what I would’ve ordered, but it was waiting for me when I got here. …It tasted pretty bad, but I guess I was grateful that Himiko – Shiraki, that was it. I was grateful Shiraki didn’t get me dog blood or something.

“…What’s the Black Shieldmaiden like?” I took another sip, giving the cup a good, long look this time. It was plastered with the image of some angry-looking metal singer. …I wasn’t really sure how to answer Shiraki’s question, but she didn’t give me much time to think about it before asking again, louder this time, with a face like a pet waiting for its master to get home.

“…Apostle Cooldown?” Pretty sure none of these people even know what ‘apostle’ means.

The words were razors on my lips as I tried to explain what she...what Murderface was like. …No, what the Black Shieldmaiden – what Warmaster Matsuda – was like.

She was amazing. She was...I don’t know. Enchanting. A blossom of violence in a garden of sinners. Seeing her work was watching a whirlwind of icy hate and manic, primal joy. Every gunshot, every bloom of fire and thunder from every grenade was placed with a steely tenderness that only a killer could understand. She made murder graceful. She made it more than just a game, or a job. It was her own sort of kindness, and she loved it.

…She was like me. She understood how it…felt. What it meant to kill someone. She stared through the horrible shit in the world and she stripped it away with her beauty. That was the Black Shieldmaiden. That was Matsuda Chiaki.

…There was more to it, but Shiraki wouldn’t have understood, even as she leaned in closer and closer, hanging on my every word. …She was infatuated, too. But she didn’t know Murderface. She didn’t love her, she just loved the idea of the Shieldmaiden. A savior for the sick fucks out there. A hero for the crazy and the bloodstained.

“I’d really like to meet her.” I bit back a ‘fuck you’. She wasn’t the one with a Kill Order on her head. All she had to do was walk to her Warmaster’s office and ask for two minutes to kiss ass. She was in the Ninth, she could just walk up to her and eat lunch together or something. My hand squeezed around my knife. Bullshit. It was bullshit. She didn’t even know her. She didn’t-

Deep breaths, Wendy-san. It’s over. You died, she forgot. You don’t have a place in her world anymore.

A gentle voice murmured from the table behind me, one that carried a golden warmth that made my cheeks burn a little.

…Yeah. …She’s better off anyway.

Much as I would’ve liked to ditch her for a late lunch consisting solely of a bottle of tequila and the barrel of my service pistol, Shiraki was most of the reason I was in Mitakihara. Apparently some Prophet and her goon squad had been giving them a lot of trouble here lately – the same Prophet, I confirmed last night, that was after Tomoe Mami. The girl Matsuda was hunting.

…If I knew Murderface, the problem was as good as cleaned up already. This was basically a waste of time. But that wasn’t good enough, no matter how many times I told her. Of course she wanted to see the Shieldmaiden splatter the unworthy all over the pavement, but it was our job – mine especially – to join her. To help Matsuda hold up the unbearable weight of her sins.

The sanctification of the city began when Lucius and the false Prophet were crushed by the Blessed Lady’s power, she'd told me. The gates to the Golden Land had appeared in the stadium last night, and now every drop of blood spilled in Her name would pry them open more and more. …I was supposed to oversee a ceremony, the first offering the Church in Mitakihara made to Her.

Getting real sick of crazy bitches telling me what to do.

We reached the old Shinto shrine at the edge of the city a couple of hours before the ceremony was supposed to start. I don't really know from shrines, but it seemed like the place had been fixed up recently. Probably the effort of a lot of girls, treating this like an after-school club, or one magic architect. …Guess it was a little cute, if they were all as cheery about it as Shiraki.

They'd wheeled in a huge flatscreen to watch the concert footage on. Must have been a bitch to get out here, and it'd be even worse if it rained or something. …Wasn't really sure what kind of crowd to expect. Maybe they needed a projector or something instead. It didn't exactly seem like much of a religious ceremony thing. Little like reviewing a tape of a bunch of fanatics firebombing a mosque before mass.

Maybe that was what they did now. Shit. I haven't been to mass in like ten years. Not since Dad stopped dragging me out of my room to take me. …Wonder if he'd be mad if he knew about all this. Disgusted, probably.

Someone inched up next to me while I was thinking, like she didn't think I'd notice. I grumbled out a 'what' while she was opening and closing her mouth like a fish with Downs Syndrome.

"S-sorry! Sorry." …It was one of the girls that I met up with when I first arrived. Didn't remember her name. Somethingko. Aqua blue hair, weird eyes. Nervous temperament. Probably expected it to rain, she was carrying an oversized umbrella that I thought might fit over the TV. Maybe she was the one that brought it.

Spit it out, Umbrella.

"Sorry! …Are you really the Apostle she sent? The Living Miracle?"

…Sure. Why not. It was like all these people did was make up stupid titles.

"Real…ly?" She cut herself off halfway through the word, like she'd choked on it, and the kid seemed to shrink as I stared at her. "Right. Really. I mean, why would you lie about that, right?" She spun the umbrella in her hands.

"So…did you meet her? Do you know the Blessed Lady?" Even cringing away, her eyes were wide, filled with a wonder you only see in little kids and idiots.

Now that's rude, she's your fan, sneered another voice, faint and distorted, like it came from the bottom of a sea of thick tar.

…Of course I'd met her. Met her on the edge of Hell, and she…

A high-pitched whine filled my ears, and a hiss that almost sounded like giggling. …Yeah. …I'd met her, and she brought me back. So I could see Kong again.

Umbrella took a deep breath.

"…I'm a little scared of her. Is she…is she really like this? Himi-chan's been acting weird since she joined, and…I don't know. I don't want to bathe the world in b-blood. I'm not really…I just wanted to be friends with youkai...Sorry, I know this is probably…" She trailed off, gripping her umbrella with everything she had. "…Please don't kill me…"

I opened my mouth, then shut it again. It was sort of nice to know that not everyone that touched this whole thing immediately turned batshit insane. …I couldn't give her a good answer. Couldn't just tell her to run, not when I wasn't sure what to believe myself. But I wasn't going to hurt her.

"…Whatever you believe," I told her, "don't rush into it like a dumbass. A blood cul…church is probably not worth it if you're not ready to serve a crazy murder god. …It's something we always told the new kids back at the Eighth. You don't get to take it back, once you start spilling blood. That taste stays in your mouth forever."

She smiled a little, though something about it seemed kind of forced. …There was one other thing, though. Felt like I couldn't just…I don't know. Let the only sane person I'd talked to in a while walk away without hearing it.

"…Things are gonna get messy. No matter what you do. Especially in Japan. The Ninth Warmaster – the Black Shieldmaiden, Her herald, or whatever it is now - knows that better than anyone. What that means, though…" I just shrugged, and she seemed to get the message.

I barely got a minute to myself after that. As more and more magical girls filtered into the grounds over the next couple of hours, they all wanted to meet me. Ask questions I didn't want to answer, or questions they wouldn't like the answer to. It was, unexpectedly, a hell of a relief when the ceremony finally started. …First time I'd said that about a sermon about the Blessed Lady in a long time.

First time I'd bothered to sit in on one in months, too. It was all the same, whether it was Alice or Shiraki, whether it was the Second or the Ninth. …At least they had the dignity, now, to strip away the bullshit. There was no beautiful goddess to greet us when we died. There was only a candy-scented monster with more teeth than face, and if you were lucky and the people around you were crazy enough to…to throw away way more than they should have, then you got to come back. But you wouldn't sleep the same anymore. And everything would be cold, and she'd…

…Doesn't matter. Nevermind.

"Sisters! Chosen! Beloved of the Blessed Lady! The Black Shieldmaiden has returned to us, and she has anointed our city with the blood of the wicked! The minions of the Prophet, the slaves of the False World, have fallen unceremoniously before Her Golden Power! The sacrifices have begun!"

Shiraki howled out her rhetoric the moment the video ended, her eyes glowing a sickly yellow-gold in the darkness of the evening. The crowd screamed mindlessly in response, beyond a few…less-than-enthused newcomers, like Umbrella.

"You have now seen Her Glory for yourselves – and not just you! Every blasphemous soul in the world now knows the Truth, now understands Her Beauty! The Age of the Blessed Lady has begun! The Doors of the Golden Land have appeared in Mitakihara, in our beautiful city, pried open by the power of the Shieldmaiden, who has finally chosen to grace this world and bear our sins once more!"

The screams became deafening, and an acrid, unbearable scent met my nostrils as I stared down at the magical girls that had gathered.

"Children of the Third Messenger, of the Tenth Messenger! Of the Seventh, and our foreign guests! Rejoice and honor the Ninth, the House of the Blessed Lady! The Officio that Our Shieldmaiden has chosen for Her Golden Army! Honor the Golden Light who leads us! Honor her Holy Blade, honor the Blood Knight! We are but servants under Her Power, and tonight! Tonight, we begin our service anew!"

…Shiraki paused for a breath, waiting for the crowd to simmer down. …She was breathing hard, her face flushed. …This was worse than Annie. This was even worse than V.

"Tonight, we begin our consecration of the False World, our preparation for Her arrival! Tonight, we cut away the first of its rotting flesh! Tonight, we too shall begin to pry open the doors to the Golden Land with our very hands!"

Lights, Callidus-provided I guess, shone down on the altar at the front of the shrine, silhouetting Shiraki and me as we stepped out of the way. …The scent got worse. I could hear it. I could hear Her.

…They'd strapped a girl to the altar. Bound tight by sacred ropes, gagged and blindfolded. Silent. Probably didn't have a voice anymore. Maybe literally.

"Victim of wicked cruelty, child of the dead world! This creature will be the first of many to know the Lady's Grace in Her loving arms! She is ignorant and broken, knows not her own misery! She mistakes paltry illusions around her for grand Truths! She knows only vulgar platitudes for joy! But now, now she will be free, and her worthless shell will be the foundation upon which we all reach the Golden Land! Apostle Cooldown, please! Please, honor this poor soul with the Lady's mercy!"

My knife flicked into my hand of its own accord as I approached the altar. ...I didn't want to do this. I couldn't do this. The magical lights on me seemed to burn me through my uniform. …I never pretended not to be a sick fuck. I'm a killer. But I don't…want this.

Don't you love her? Sweet breath in my ear as something…soft pressed against my arm, guiding my knife toward the girl's chest. …A white, bloodstained glove rested on my own, with wicked claws that seemed to pierce through the metal and into my hand.

…This has nothing to do with her. She doesn't want this.

Of course she wants this. You were there. You saw her. She looked like she was dancing, didn't she? A small, soft head rested against my shoulder. …My gazed flicked to the side, and I met sunless eyes. Beautiful, sunless eyes, and a sweet, dark scent that filled my senses.

You're doing all of this for her, aren't you? You're here for her. You came back for her. …I need you to do this. She needs you to do this.

…No, she doesn't. This is crazy. This is…

You're the only one who can, Wendy. You're one of my chosen. A very, very special one. You're my living miracle. We can show her to the Golden Land together.

"…And she'll remember me…?" …I mumbled it out loud. I didn't mean to. My mind had gone entirely numb, save for Her words.

She'll always remember you, Wendy.

…The girl on the altar screamed as the knife sank into her chest, as it cut through skin and muscle and bone. As I dragged it down to her stomach. She thrashed in her bonds, what was left of her voice cracking in her gag. I didn't care. I barely noticed. My body moved on its own in long, practiced strokes as my knife sliced down to her pelvis, and as I drew it again and thrust it into her thigh.

My arm was so light. My knife was a part of me, like it used to be. …The cold knot deep in my body loosened, then vanished. I could feel it again. Warmth. It was so easy, as my knife carved through her, as her thrashing grew faint, then limp. …It was a little too soon, though. I hadn't even gotten to her face yet.

The crowd's murmurs grew into cheers as Shiraki shifted, a smile of heated ecstasy growing on her face. Her hands moved, a flourish that I doubted was at all necessary, the gestures of a miracle worker. The girl – the near-corpse – under me began to convulse as her wounds erupted with a torrent of blood, one that whirled into the air, curling into a beautiful spiral.

As the girl was drained entirely, it became an elegant, shining snake that shimmered scarlet and gold in the light as it danced over the crowd, sprinkling red scales onto their faces. …Clever. She'd cut her wrist to add more blood to it. Made a bigger show for the people. Preaching was half showmanship, I guess.

I left my knife decisively buried in the girl's neck, but it would be gone in moments. It was me, and it never strayed very far. …I didn't really mean to, but I smiled out at the crowd, with the soft touch of slender arms of a pink-haired goddess wrapped around one of mine, squeezing it into an almost-nonexistent bust. The stench of blood and candy filled the grounds, and I could see the love of the Blessed Lady fill the hearts of every single girl there.

For the first time since my contract, I felt really, truly free.

"Well, to be perfectly honest, no, actually that's really easy to do. But it's really, really annoying sometimes, especially when they suddenly get into their heads that they're some sort of superhero! One of them actually tried to blast me with the weapon I gave her before flying off! And she was really pretty too, we had the same taste in hairstyle and everything!" Pinky blinks her midnight-black eyes after a moment. "W-well, she had long brown hair, though, and she kept blathering on something about making friends and everything..."

>...What, like saving kids from burning orphanages and all that?

>"Sort of." Ruri giggles here. "She just...does it. The rescuing thing, the saving thing. All the superhero stuff. And I don't think she's got an Officio like you, or all the other Magical Girls I've encountered. She always works alone, and she never takes any reward money or anything like that."

>Sounds...well, remarkable. And a bit stupid, really.

>"Is it, really?" The idol's tone of voice is pensive, here. Quiet. "Isn't she doing what Magical Girls are actually supposed to be doing, Chiaki-chan? Helping people, rescuing people? Protecting everyone's hopes and dreams?"

You know, considering how the Callidus squad we sent for to support us for the Ruri misson keep going on about the Blessed Lady, it wouldn't be a stretch to imagine that something like half the Officio is compromised by cultists.

And I can imagine the officio descending into civil war as we have to purge the cult.

It's...it's from that unlisted number, again. The one that sent you that message, way back in Iori's suite. In Midori's illusion. Asking you to wake up. The message before that told you to give up, and move on.

The message now was no different, no less cryptic.

No less irritating.

>Don't bother with the procedure. It's not worth trying. It's not worth the risk.
>No matter what you do, the outcome will be the same.
>You should just give up. Isn't it time you gave yourself a break?

>Who the hell are you?

You tap at the SEND button, ignoring that small and often-ignored logical part of you that said that there is no way that message is going through. Kharn said it herself - if the reception inside the base didn't suck, what with you being deep underground, then any outgoing signal would probably be heavily dampened to the point of uselessness. But logic, right now, clearly wasn't working, with this nameless ray of sunshine able to send you a message.

The message goes through.

And the reply pops up immediately after. Surprise surprise, it's as cheerful as ever.

> My identity is not important. Only my message is important.
> The real Akemi Homura would have understood. She would have known that it was hopeless.
> Let this be the last time you try to do the impossible.
> Let this be the end. You cannot save her. You cannot save anyone.

>A Fool.

So, who was this? Wendy?

Because it happened right in front of everyone's eyes? Look, everyone knows Mami is evil to some degree, she LIKESmurdering people, any sort of people. It is the entire reason why she is so good at fighting and killing. Yet we don't care. That's easy because we never saw her do any right in front of our eyes. If you had twenty pages of Mami: After Action Reports lying around you'd be thinking of her very differently.

Also Wendy is clearly not only nuts (that was clear since day one) but also very very possessed and may not be in control of her actions anymore. And that's a loose cannon you can't have kicking about.

Actually it does matter, she has inside info on Pinky's plans and her entire cult so killing her loses us all the information and the chance to use her to wipe it out in one shot by using Wendy

And on her own she is no more crazy or broken than Chiaki, are we going to put a bullet in our own soul gem as well because of that?

>> ☐ Anonymous 10/28/13(Mon)16:09 No.27989513

Whatever the result, I vote that this whole shitstorm ends in Chiaki flipping out in front of the cults.

"Fuck YOU, fuck YOU, fuck YOU, and ESPECIALLY fuck you Wendy for being enough of a dumbshit to believe anything that crazy bitch says!"

She didn't exactly do it against her will, she simply didn't resist when she was presented with the hope that the one she loves will love her again.

So... You have to wonder, just how many apostles are there? There is no way Wendy is the only one, is there?

>>27989488
How does that follow exactly? I just reasoned out why she's NOT Pinky's sockpuppet, even if Pinky obviously has a hold on her - that hold is only through Chiaki, which means that there's still a decent chance it can be broken. And anyway, to be reluctant enough that Pinky has to step in personally to convince her, combined with her obvious lack of reverence for Pinky, are more than good enough indicators that she's nowhere near the level of fanaticism of other Blessed Lady goons.

There are ways to get around that shit already in universe so it isn't the end of everything

If we take too long and she ends up fully under her control then we will need to but while Wendy is still Wendy and able to think and even object to what she is doing then she is redeemable

The easier explanation is: she views Chiaki different from Wendy and all the other pawns. She has no objection to just forcing them to serve her without question, but she wants to break Chiaki the proper way, with their 'game'. That's why Chiaki is a-okay with the timestop, and Wendy and the rest are in danger.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/31/13(Thu)08:04 No.28034746

Taking a deep breath, you debrief your mutant cat of a boss about your recently-concluded mission, which pretty much involved spending the better part of forty-eight hours being jerked around by a super idol with too much money and too little sense.

...It's a painful debriefing to hold. You're still sore about Ruri's antics, one of them being that rigged contest thing that took you completely by surprise. Sure, Kirishima Ruri as a client and a principal was obedient and accommodating enough that coercion never came into the picture, but you'll be damned if she didn't make things difficult for you.

You go through the events as quickly as you can, from your first meeting with the idol to the many events that you needed to escort her through, and finally up to the bit in the stadium where you had to brutalize Lucius and her lackeys in public. You mention here how you were clued in to what was about to happen with Yoshitaka Mine's attempted escape, and how it turned out that Lucius and her idiots were after you instead. All for the Prophet, they kept screaming.

Bunch of fucking lunatics.

You go through the events as quickly as you can, from your first meeting with the idol to the many events that you needed to escort her through, and finally up to the bit in the stadium where you had to brutalize Lucius and her lackeys in public. You mention here how you were clued in to what was about to happen with Yoshitaka Mine's attempted escape, and how it turned out that Lucius and her idiots were after you instead. All for the Prophet, they kept screaming.

You made sure to mention the degree of competency that Karasawa Enishi and Squad Hiryu showed in the mission - about how they never lost morale even when one of their own was compromised.

You wrap up your summarization by saying that Kirishima Ruri didn't seem to be in any danger at all, besides the Yakuza. Her staff seemed competent and savvy enough for that kind of threat, and Kyosuke himself surprised you by being capable enough to contribute to the mission without being a hindrance. That said, she may need more Magical Girl protection, as Yoshitaka Mine had proven that those after her may have Magical Girls on their payroll.

Overall, it wasn't that bad, but Ruri was a pain in the ass to work with, and it'll be too soon when you voluntarily choose another idol job again. You'll be delegating those to other people from now on.

Kyuubey nods after you finish. "Well, we'll see about that. Kirishima Ruri did give us quite the cut of the ticket sales on top of her initial payment. All in all a very profitable mission, with the added benefit of televised promotion. It's almost a shame that the mission was cut short - the projected revenue for the remaining days would have been considerable." He makes a very pleased sound, here. "More missions with this kind of payout, and we may be able to fund the construction of our own moon base!"

Having your own moon base sounds kind of neat, but..heh, so it's all about the money for him, huh?

The incubator blinks at this. "I'd be lying if I didn't say that revenue was a big part in this, Matsuda. But thankfully, I am not my older brother, the Third. It is most of it, but not all of it." He shakes his head. "Besides, running an Officio can be a very costly endeavor, sometimes."

Well...you're not going to pretend that it's cheap, either. You'll just take his word for it, you're not in the mood to argue about finances or shit like that.

"How disappointing. And here I was looking forward to going over our profit margins with you." There's an amused tone in the mutant cat's voice. "In any case, let's get to the heart of the matter here. No doubt you have your own suspicions regarding this 'Prophet', who seems to have you in mind as a target?"

You nod, here. Lucius had already admitted as much, as well as also confessing to the partially-disassembled corpse she sent your way. Making the victim, whoever she was, look like Mami. ...Yeah, you're looking forward to interrogating her, that's for sure.

"No doubt, although Tomoe Mami may have beaten you to the punch, there. As soon as your prisoners were interred in their Silent Rooms, she was waiting for them." Kyuubey nods, here. "Did Lucius or her cohorts say anything that could give as a lead as to who this Prophet is, during your altercation with them?"

How do you respond?

[x] Lucius claimed that I had taken something - or rather, someone - precious away from her, though apparently the actual reason they've got it in for me is because I'm totally bad news for the world, somehow. Sounds like a crock of shit. At any rate, given my unreliable memory, that doesn't really tell me as much as it should. Do you have any ideas?

Now, don't get me wrong here, but someone on your payroll had predicted the very same thing - Misaka had an...episode of sorts, and claimed that I had to end the world. But if Misaka IS their Prophet, then they were certainly not acting with her consent or knowledge, since immediately afterwards she all but begged me to do it before 'she' could. She's had a few of these episodes, almost always relating to me or my shield."

"But my second lead casts doubt upon that little theory. I was also accused of killing someone close to the Prophet, and as far as I can remember I haven't killed anyone Misaka is close to. However, one person springs to mind when I think of people with grievances against me - Oriko, Kirika's friend. If she's contracted, and gained the ability to see the future out of a desire for vengeance..."

"There is of course, always a third possibility. Do we know the location of the Golden Staff, that was once in possession of the Third Officio's Warmaster?"

Amidst their ramblings they mentioned that 'The Prophet' 'had yet to kill innocents, lost most of her loved ones and continues to suffer from some ailment.

They might not much clues to go by but these were the only concrete statements they provided.

However two of the attackers appear to romantically involved with each other. One Kana and one Kizuna. I suspect interrogation against these two would yield results the fastest."

I disagree with that. If anything, our actions have shown that it is possible to retire and stay alive to enjoy it. Kharn, of all people, is about to become a housewife and a mother, due to us.

As for the whole "fight and deal with death every day", that's only when you're on the active roster, and really is not much different from being a soldier in an active combat zone.

"Ah. A personal vendetta of some sort. Someone who wishes to seek recompense for something you did. As you say, it doesn't exactly narrow down the list of suspects, as it were." It's here that Kyuubey seems to chuckle. "Attempting to put together a list of suspects that may have revenge as a motive may take months, even years. You may have forgotten about them, what with your amnesia, but they certainly haven't."

...Of course you know that, you very nearly snap at your bastard mutant cat of a boss. Everything up to this point has been you getting fucked for something you did that you forgot! Fucking insane eldritchian goddess living in your shield not enough of a hint for him?

As if he hadn't heard - and he didn't, since you weren't crazy enough to admit to him that Pinky wasn't as minor of a problem you keep making her out to be - Kyuubey turns away from you to face his array of monitors. "Thankfully, careful interrogation by Tomoe Mami - as well as a cursory scan of their Soul Gems - confirms that they were contracted to the Third, my older brother. You'll remember him from the account Kharn gave you."

You nod. You're not likely to forget the tale Kharn told you. It's...well, you can hardly believe it yourself, but it's Kharn. Crazy as she was, she didn't have any reason to lie, being exiled to Siberia and everything.

...Wait, if they're from the Third...didn't Kyuubey assimilate what remained of the Third Officio, after Kharn went on her murder spree with Ahriman?

"Most of them, not all." The Incubator turns to look at you again, his round crimson eyes glowing. "A number of them broke away from the Third as soon as I declared the takeover, proclaiming themselves as loyal only to Ahriman. Kharn had a field day rooting them out, of course, hunting them all over the city with you and Malal in tow." Another chuckle. "It was around the fifth day of the hunting season, as Kharn called it, that you almost died in assisting her."

That stopped you cold. You? How?

"Desperation, mostly. Kharn was slaughtering them by the dozens each day, and with you and Malal by her side, she was practically invincible. Their last ditch attempt had them pooling what little they had left into seperating you from your team and hunting you down. And they very nearly succeeded."

...Huh. More stuff you don't remember. Well, at least he's telling you about them now, right?

"Do mind that I wasn't expecting this to come up again." Kyuubey says, as if reading your mind. "After the incident, we conducted our own purge. With the help from one of the captured masterminds behind your assassination attempt, we managed to track down the rest of them, as well as those embedded deep within our own Officio, hiding behind re-established contracts." He shakes his head. "It appears she didn't find all of them. A pity, but I understand that prognostication is not an exact art. Especially made from inside a Silent Room."

How do you react?

"The Culexus, of course. We used them mainly to predict the locations of potential Witch events. Every Officio has something of the equivalent - the Fourth relies on statistical analysis, the Second relies on prayers and visions from their seers, the Seventh relies on teacup leaf readings - we rely on our Culexus." He turns to look at you. "Did you know that it was Malal who predicted the location of the Witch Charlotte? Not only that, but the exact time and place, and who I would send to address it." Another chuckle. "She also predicted that someone would be found inside. She was right. Do you know who Tomoe Mami found, when I sent her into the Witch's barrier?"

You frown at the cat. For fuck's sake, you wanted to know who was doing the prognostications NOW, not a fucking history lesson--

"You. Tomoe Mami found you." Kyuubey seems to smirk, here. "You must appreciate that a prediction like that, accurate right down to the second, is rare. Even the Fourth's most advanced forecasts has a margin of error as large as two, maybe three days at best, and in a one kilometer radius. The Seventh's teacup readers can only predict identities, of who the next major Witch event was before she turned."

...Huh. So the Officio's Culexus - and Malal - were really that good?

"The best." Kyuubey nods. "Why, we even managed to predict the last Walpurgisnacht with our Culexus, once more with unerring accuracy, while the rest of the Officios blundered about. Of course, well, that would be the last thing our Culexus squad would predict, as nearly all of them died." It's then that the Incubator lets out a sigh, one that sounds more mournful than anything else.

"Now we only have Omegon. She can predict Witch locations easily and accurately enough, but she needs long periods of rest while doing so. She says they're growing more and more difficult to seek out."

A shrug. "Thankfully, our prisoner from the Third - the one who helped us identify any potential traitors in our Officio - has been assisting us in that regard, along with some profitable predictions in the stock market."

Right. And who is this prisoner, then, the one that pretty much betrayed her own Officio? Yeah, you get that she helped, but to do something like that...

"Amane Haruka." Kyuubey brings up the picture of a rather coldly-beautiful girl on his many screens. Her pale blonde hair and startlingly-bright blue eyes making her look...fragile. "She was in significant duress at the time. And no, not because of our interrogation methods at the time. Rather, we found her in such a bad way after we rescued you that she was screaming for us to kill her. We had to sedate her heavily for days on end. Only Malal managed to bring her back, and persuade her to join us."

That's...huh. Did you, uh...did you do anything to her, then? That would probably explain it, if she went nuts like that.

"She didn't have any significant injuries when we found her." Kyuubey shakes his head. "She was, however, shrieking about how a ghost with pink hair and bloody teeth kept promising to eat her soul the moment she fell asleep."

Yeah. That'd do it.

How do you respond?

Sounds like someone we can talk about Pinky in the silent room. Not to mention that the profit is anti-pinky.

Pinky is obviously plaguing the girls who have future sight,

[x] Remark that the ghost obviously hasn't eaten her yet.

Perhaps its time to go down the silent rooms, just tell QB that we want to see Mami at work.

Madoka. First timeline also had Madoka at her weakest, with Mami beside her. So that's some good circumstantial evidence to show that Mami could hurt Walpurgis.

All Homura could do is buff Madoka. That's why she needed Kyouko.

>touch her

She seems to have a bad sense of reaction. Sayaka sprayed her with a fire extinguisher, Kyouko tackled her, and Mami has bound her in ribbons twice.

"We've kept her in a Silent Room for most of her stay here, yes. We deactivate the Silencing Field every now and then, when we require her assistance, or if she simply needs to recuperate. Rest assured she is always escorted by Omegon when we do so - and I'd hazard that our last Culexus has developed a liking for her."

That's something to take note of. What about her Soul Gem? Did she ever show any traces of corruption, or being in contact with any golden weapon, like Kirika did?

"None." Kyuubey shakes his head. "Her Soul Gem is unremarkable in all respects, except for the fact that it never seems to accumulate any Grief whatsoever." Another shrug of his tiny Incubator shoulders. "Of course, that could easily be explained by her being in the Silent Room for the better part of almost two years, but it is rather uncanny."

...Well. In that case, you want to talk to this Amane Haruka, and right away. Not only can she potentially give you information on who the Prophet could be, she's pretty much prime suspect material on being the goddamn Prophet herself.

It's here that you glare down at the Incubator. Jesus, didn't you ask him about Magical Girls that could do the future-seeing thing? Why didn't he tell you about Amane Haruka in the first place, then?

Kyuubey blinks at you, here. "She was included in the list that you asked for, Matsuda. But in light of what we've learned here, it may be moot. I must admit I didn't think she would even be a suspect, to be perfectly honest."

Oh? Why'd he say that?

The Incubator stares at you for a rather long, quiet while. "You'll see when you meet her." He says finally, before tapping a key on the Incubator-friendly keyboard in front of him. "Omegon, please come to my Office at once. Your Warmaster wishes to talk to Girl A."

A burst of static issues from the speakers mounted somewhere in the room, followed by a voice reeking of equal amounts frustration, dread and resignation. "I'm on my way." A heavy, static-corrupted sigh, and then a click, and silence fills the Incubator's Office once more.

Girl A...?

"Just a coincidence, I assure you." Kyuubey's making that expression again where he looks amused and ready to be punched in the face. "Now, while we wait for Omegon, is there anything else you'd like to ask? Do so now, Matsuda, while I'm still free to."

Do you have any other questions?

You let out an irritated sigh between gritted teeth. Right, you've had enough about shit you did in the past that you don't remember suddenly coming back up and biting you in the ass. Is it too much to ask for your complete and unredacted career profile? The one you got from Mami was so full of blacked-out lines that it looked more like a crossword puzzle without all the blocks you need to fill in.

"Redactions?" Kyuubey blinks. "What redactions?"

The redactions on your fucking file, bastard mutant cat!

"Curious." Kyuubey blinks again, before smiling to himself - or at least, he looked like he was. "Oh, I see. Malal. Of course. This explains everything."

Everything? It doesn't explain shit--

"Matsuda, I'll share something with you." It's here that Kyuubey taps on his keyboard again - and the picture of Haruka disappears, replaced by a picture of a Culexus messing around with her tablet.

"Ever since you were found in the barrier, two people took it upon themselves to...well, to care about you. One of them you'll remember as Tomoe Mami, and you felt her influence enough. The other, who took care of things in the background, is Malal. She requested that your career file be taken offline, and given to her personally to manage and update as she saw fit." He nods here. "A day before Walpurgisnacht, she surrendered your file to Mami. The redactions may have been there already when she turned it over."

...Fuck. So does that mean you'll never find out just what kind of shit you were up to before your last episode of amnesia, then?

"Perhaps, perhaps not. We do keep records, although it would take quite a bit to piece a coherent picture. Nevertheless, you could assign a team to comb through what we have, see if something can be constructed from there."

Yeah. Yeah, you'd probably want to do that.

"Assign one of your aides for the task, and I'll assign a team of Vanum to assist her." Kyuubey nods here. "I would recommend Hanegawa for this, at least. Callidus are often trained for quick information absorption, to better retain data while inside enemy lines."

Well. You won't lie, it's tempting. And it would keep her out of harm's way, especially since the Tenth's skulking around.

It's here, then, that the doors to Kyuubey's office creak open, allowing a Culexus in that's practically the mirror image of the one depicted on screen. Completely identical in every way, except for the fact that her gloves seemed worn and faded, as opposed to the rest of her costume.

"Incubator. Warmaster." The Culexus' vox-corrupted voice issues from the speaker set into her skulled helm, all warmth stolen from it. Not that there was a lot to steal, anyway - you doubt that even Sayaka could give a chillier greeting. "Here at your bidding, although I must protest this decision. There is no guarantee Haruka is mentally sound enough to receive the Warmaster."

Kyuubey makes a tutting sound, here. "Your protest is noted and summarily dismissed. It has been more than a year - she's healed enough, and your Warmaster wishes it to be so."

You see the reflective visor turn towards you, and even if you couldn't see her eyes through the heavily-tinted fibreglass, you could feel the hatred in Yuma's stare. "Very well. Warmaster, if you please." She gestures towards the door, stiffly.

"Follow her to Girl A's holding cell, Matsuda. And please, try not to kill her if things go out of hand - she's our only prognosticator left, and it would be a shame to let such a resource go to waste."

...You're not making any promises, here, but you'll try, you tell him as you follow Omegon out of his office.

"That's the best I can hope for, I suppose. Good luck, Matsuda."

ENTRY #8: WENDY
[You're not the most social type around, and Wendy isn't either, so it was hilarious to find out that both of you clicked just like that. I thought you'd never give anyone else except Mami the time of day, but you did, and her, of all people. Arguably the most haunted, the most broken soul in all of the Eighth, the White Rabbit. Kindred spirits? Probably. Even Kyoko got jealous when we told her about it.]

[...Just be careful around her, that's all I'm asking. I tried to find out just what she's about, but...there's just some people you can't read no matter what you do. She seems to really like you, though, for what it's worth, and the same could easily said vice versa. But Santa Destroy breeds broken souls - and we're not sure if they're worthy of being trusted just yet.]

[Her friends are insane. Watch out for them. Easy enough to do so. They leave half-eaten bodies in their wake. Nice girls, though.]

The crowd is bigger today. They're expecting a good fight for the finale. From my talk with Megan yesterday, it looked like she wanted to put on a good show.

Now, because of her, I want too as well.

What she stated yesterday, however, proves to be true; most of the audience seems to be cheering her on as she goes to the stage and poses around, bowing to each side of the arena to the audience. This actually might be a disadvantage for me; winning against her is completely different than winning the crowd. I overheard a fight that occurred in the cafeteria: A girl from the ninth was being shouted at, but she acted cool and played to the audience while the attacker fled the scene from embarrassment. I don't plan on running form this, but anything can happen in the finals. Anything.

"So? Out for revenge?" Izzy asks beside me. Somehow, even in this state she manages to pull off her calm and friendly persona, even with her anger from Samis final match. "I normally would remind you to be careful, but I'm sure you've already thought of that a thousand times~."

"I'm sure it's been well over a thousand by now." I sigh and rub my shoulders as the announcer keeps going over the numerous "traits" of my opponent, which include overall training, total kills and all the ways she can make someone wish they were never born. "Whoever is doing the introduction is just rubbing it in. Or she's a fan, maybe both."

The cheers erupt ten-fold as Megan is properly introduced and makes her way into the arena. She seems really pompous about it; waving her hands and arms at the audience like this is some sort of fashion show instead of a fight to the death (maybe). It almost reminds me of the idols back in Japan, dancing in the fame shes set up for herself.

It's my turn next, and I'm not that excited to see what miss announcer thinks of me.

"And now, for her fierce competitor!" The sound echoes through the room and silences the crowd.

"Fierce? Cunning would have worked better."

"Oh well, you can't ask for everything~ right?" Izzy comments next to me. "Besides, this is what other people are thinking of you, not what you want yourself to be known as. You can take this chance to change that~."

"Yea, yea, remark that all you want. At least you don't treat me like- MPH." Not again…

"Aw, you mean like Sami~? But she's sooooo much cuter than you!" She squeezes me harder for emphasis. "Honestly, if you cut out all that 'dark and edgy' stuff you'd be a great girl! Like I've said, the power doesn't make the girl."

"I get it. Thanks for letting me know. Let me go, it's time for me to die."

"Come on, don't say that~!" She does at least let me go from her grip, but holds me by the shoulders. "I have total confidence that you can avenge Sami!”

“…And it looks like she has fancy for elder girls!”

GOD DAMN IT SHE CAN SEE ME?

“You… better go on.” Izzy replies with a slight blush, turning her head away as I head up.

“And here she is! Give it up for the double liberator and savior of the Santa Destroys’ museum of death and dismemberment, Gina Falette!”

It’s the same few steps I’ve done many times in a row for the past few days; now with an extra flare coming from practice. My outfit would give off a “trench coat and rain” feel if it wasn’t as flashy as it is with its black and light blue coloring with a few grays. A thick scarf around my neck flows behind me, growing large enough to become some kind of a cape. Grey and light blue spirals adorn the large corset and jacket combination that ends with long leather pants and knee-high boots.

I wonder if Eightball is trying to make me edgy. Maybe he already succeeded.

“Hey, you shouldn’t look so glum for a fight!” Megan calls out from across the arena, whip already in hand.

“I don’t intend to call this a fight.” She gives off an amused laugh at this.

“So then, what shall this be called?”

“Three, two, one…”

“FIGHT!”

It something isn’t broken, don’t try to fix it.

Well, that’s her idea at least, still starting off with the grand circle-whip around to show off her weapon. It would be pretty menacing if I hadn’t seen her do the exact same thing yesterday.

First things first; a shield around myself and having the mace in my hand. Now, if she wants a showoff-fest first, then sure. With a grin on my face I begin to slowly walk towards her end of the arena.

“Tch, don’t underestimate me!” She whips up and attempts an attack from an angle at the right. The mace collides with it nicely; sending the chain to the other side which gives me room.

Megan goes for it again from the left, fails, and then on the third manages to wrap the chain around the gap in the mace. I heave it away and break into a sprint, resummoning it into my hand and jumping to do a downward strike.

It wasn’t the best idea as Megan whips upward to catch me from under. Fortunately the shield is still up and it bursts from the attack, causing enough force to slide her back and give me an edge to throw my weapon at her which connects nicely with her cheek and jaw. She staggers a bit before rebalancing herself as I land, with a few cheers coming from the audience.

“Damn, good play.” Spitting a bit of blood onto the floor, she looks at me with the ferocity I saw back in her last match. “Let’s keep goin!”

Megan flicks the whip straight, making a bee-line right to my face. I jump back in time to see the entire chain stiffen and begin to rotate. Pops and crackles of electricity sound out from the straight chain as it turns faster and faster.

She… just turned it into an electrical chainsaw sword that’s longer then her body.

My feet barely react in time to move out of the way of the redesigned weapon when she thrusts it forward at me. Another mace forms in my hand as I swat it away, but it holds itself together unlike its whip form where it would flail around. She then swerves it under, aiming for my feet with a sweeping strike. Jumping over it is easy but it leads into her next swipe at me at the mid section. I block it by using the gap in the mace and-

I’ve made another mistake.

Almost instantly the sword bends back into its original whip form and curls itself around the mace and my hand. The sharp pain and static shock makes my hand drop the mace and pulls me to Megan who’s both advancing on me and pulling the whip to her.

There’s a way out, but it’s going to hurt like hell. A small barrier temporarily forms around my wrist as I wrench my arm free of it. It pops but the damage dealt to the arm still FUCKING HURTS. I immediately force a bolt straight at her, which hits her right arm which she-

Oh. Fucking clever.

I’m quickly bound in her trap, using extra force from her arm to swing the whip directly at me. Her arm is still sore; I can tell she wants to end this quickly.

“Good job, fucker.” She spits out, holding her right wrist with her left hand. “But the fun ends here.”

Ah… ehehehehe.

She Doesn’t -Know-, Does She?

Lets Make Sure She Doesn’t Forget.

…Fuck you, kinda.

I got a brief flashback of when Gina lost against this exact move. There was a lot of blood and gore, but most MG’s are used to it. It was the sound itself; of flesh being ripped from bones and meaty bits being eviscerated that stuck in my mid. I had silently hoped then that I wouldn’t hear that sound again.

OH WELL. It was made even WORSE with the grinding metal unable to fight back the “limit breaker” that’s fixated in my power. The whip flies off of my body as I become illuminated in the familiar light blue glow. Refreshed, strong, willing, motivated.

Now, let’s see how you handle me.

“Fucking hell!” Even with the exasperated response, she still looks willing to fight. Damn, she is EXACTLY what the rabbits want. The whip straightens back to its solid form, ready to charge at me again. “How about you die already?!”

Oh, Not This Time!

The gap in the mace collides with the tip of the whip-blade underneath, sending a shockwave that breaks its normal form and causes a ripple upward, traveling through the chain until it whips back at the handle which makes Megan curse and drop it from pain.

Heh, physics.

Time can’t be wasted now; this form only lasts so long. One bolt of pain keeps her distracted while I close the distance, but she manages to avoid the first swing at her by rolling to the side and grabbing her whip again. I can tell she’s injured, but by her personality she isn’t going to give easily.

You Must Kill Her To End It.

Sure… Fine.

The mace tangles with the whip when I throw it at her, causing her to fumble with it and not notice my right fist closing in on her face. With the last of my extra power from my form, the punch rams her cheek and sends her flying back to what used to be my side of the arena. My aura dissipates around me as the whip goes flying with her and- OW, hits my backside.

That really huts. I’m really running out of time.

It swirls over my hand, engulfing it in power. My blood, my sign of pain, becomes my power as I raise my hand over my head, sending it upward to form the barrier I’ve done many times before. Just right now, I don’t care about winning the tourney or showing I’m the best; I just want to NOT FUCKING DIE.

That’s all that matters.

With the mace back in my hand I charge ahead while she charges her whip again, but her usage of power the entire time is leaving her drained and the whip is spinning noticeably slower than normal.

Jump attack into spinning overhead strike from me. She dodges to the left.

Megan whips around and tries to get me as I land. I jump over it via back flip.

I finally manage to get close enough for a good strike until I feel the whip trying to crawl up on me again, sliding over my barrier. With a stomp of my foot the barrier goes off, causing her to fall back and pull the whip-

Not this again…

I loose my footing as I’m dragged with Megan down to the floor. My left arm and legs pin her down but the whip encircles my entire body that prevents me from moving. It still twirls over my skin, however weak it is, and begins, grinding, painfully, and-

Oh, I can win this.

The grey and blue matter swims up my body, accumulating at my right hand, still wrapped in the painful chains. It burns, churning the last power I have into one last bolt.

“OH.” Megan finally realizes, looking at my hand. “Fuck. You.”

“…My pleasure.”

One last bolt. Her eyes roll backwards in pain before closing. The grinding on my skin ceases. My body falls limp on top of hers. “We have a winner!” Is the last thing I hear before my hearing deafens and I slip… away…

But somehow, I knew… this wasn't death.

Despite the warnings that I should rest more, nobody stopped me from grabbing a nearby pole and using it as a walking stick to get to the elevator. As it slowly rose up to his floor, Megan somehow came to mind. While she was a bitch to deal with, she was fighting for a good fight, it seemed, even if she wanted to win in the end.

Maybe I can reconcile with her later. Maybe.

“What the he- Gina!” My welcome from the Incubator of the eighth isn’t what I expected. “You’re supposed to be on yo’ ass resting right now! The fuck you came up here for?”

“I get a prize right?” Resting in a chair feels perfect right now, lounging right next to the thing that made me a magical girl.

This was the place. Room 312 of New Hope Hospital, a relatively new building off in the high-end district of Mitakihara. The night air crept in through the window behind me; I didn’t really bother to close it, ‘cause I’d be leaving through it anyway. I guess it depended on whether the staff would be around, but the room was unoccupied anyway.

Even I would have felt crazy bad about breaking in if there were anyone in here. Sneaking into a hospital wasn’t really something I liked doing anyway, y’know? But like I figured it would be, the door was closed. Probably locked, too, after they let the girls from QB Heavy in here. This was the sort of problem only a magical girl could deal with, after all.

This was a witch’s barrier.

The way she’d put it, it was bad. Really super ultra USA bad. This little barrier was enough to get the Ninth Officio to send in some really heavy artillery, some of their best. Witches in hospitals were basically the worst thing, she said (in not quite so many words), with plenty of weak, desperate, people to feed off of. Scary stuff. It kinda made me glad I never really got sick.

The thing…the marking, or the entrance or whatever, was plain as day on the wall, a sigil that crappified the very air around it. The wall it was sitting on looked years older and kind of unwashed, and it tainted the whole room with a sick purple-black. I just…I just had to touch it, right? Touch it and also not get debrained by bad witch mojo. Nothing to be scared of.

Totally fine, nya. Completely safe.

…I took one last look at the window. There was still time to turn back, and it was probably safer and smarter. Kaneda would be pretty mad, if she was here. I mean, she'd still go in, but she'd wanna do it alone, and I'd probably just go in after her anyway. And then one of us would get hurt, and we wouldn't be friends for like two weeks, but I'd be there anyway to make sure she didn't sneak out of her stupid room, or she'd show up to lecture me about just staying at home if I was just going to do dumb stuff, or…

…Ugh. It didn't matter anyway. I was pretty much being handed a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity on a silver platter – the Warmaster was in there right now. A goddess of battle, I heard, who danced in the blood of the fallen and picked the flesh off of their skulls with her teeth so that she could make stylish office furniture. Also she was some kind of sex dynamo? Those things seemed kinda mutually-exclusive to me, but sparklies get off to weird stuff.

My hand brushed against the sigil on the wall, and I took a deep breath as the world around me shimmered. It swelled for a long moment, everything did, and I felt as though my insides might explode out in a glorious shower of truth and gore. Then, all at once, it squeezed together. I felt a flash of phantom pain, something that really should have hurt and didn't, and the world turned white.

This would be worth it. It had to be worth it. If I made it through this stupid barrier and got through the interview with Warmaster Kharn mostly unmolested, this would be such a big scoop I could already taste it in the back of my mouth.

Wait, no. Wait. That was still the hospital smell. Ew.

I thought for a second that I might have died, with the white light there. Like, gotten squished into nothing - an inglorious and pointless end for our charming heroine. But as I scooped myself up off the ground, it became abundantly clear that this was just a THING here. The world around me – the sky, at least – was all a bright, blinding white, with the ground under me a stark and abyssal black. With a glance, I checked my body, too – a dark grey, just barely distinguishable from the ground, just barely shaded in. A sleek and alluring silhouette in somebody's low-budget sex scene.

With some deliberation, I trotted over to the edge of the black building. It was…odd. A little hard to move anywhere else, like invisible, intangible walls blocked me in, forcing me along one path. When I peered down off the edge, all I saw were more pillars – buildings, I guess, each curved and distorted in its own way, from what I could tell. A mock-up of Mitakihara in shadow, twisted from a young girl's perspective and crowded around a colossal statue with its arms outstretched. It clutched a torch in one hand, the only dot of color in an otherwise silhouetted world. The whole city seemed to be bowing to it, or at least it felt that way when I stared at it long enough, and it made me kind of uneasy.

…Well, I didn't have too much time to sit and think about it, and I was kind of grateful. They were probably almost done already. I kept it to a minute or two of footage of the place and my own commentary, although it felt like I could barely get the words out here. I was sort of surprised my camera worked her at all, but I figured I could probably just leave it running for now. I guess even if I didn't catch the Warmaster in time, this could still make for a really, really cool article.

I pulled myself up over the edge of another building, the third one in the last five that'd been higher, almost too high to work my way up. This place wasn't THAT much harder to get around than the real city, but I could barely get handholds on these buildings at all. The sides were almost completely smooth, aside from deep gouges here and there I couldn't even make out in the silhouettes. I kind of wondered if the Warmaster had made these. …Actually, I really really hoped the Warmaster had made these, because I didn't want to meet what else might have. Or maybe it was just symbolism or something. I couldn't really say; witches are weird.

Truth be told, I wasn't really moving all that quickly. This whole place, even if it was basically leading me in one long, wobbly line toward the statue in the center, was a real pain to navigate. I could make the jumps down to lower buildings, sure, but the climbing really broke my pace, and the air here felt really, really thin. Even breathing as deep as I could manage didn't feel like nearly enough, and stopping to try and rest only seemed to make it even harder, like I was just sucking all the oxygen out of the entire barrier.

Sometimes it really, really sucks being a normal. As if to really hammer that point home, the building under me started to ripple – no, it was like it was quivering. Shaking a little bit, as it forced…something out, just a few feet to my side. A giant snake, at a glance, or the shadow of one, unnaturally thin and swelling near the top. It ended in a parody of a wolf's face with awful, empty eyes I could see the blinding-white sky through, and strings of I-don't-even-know. It wasn't quite right, it wasn't quite at an angle where I should have been able to see what I did, I think, and trying to think about it hurt my brain. Not that I had a ton of time to think – the moment we locked eyes, it swung down at me, its mouth open wide enough to swallow my head.

Nooope. Nope nope nope. I kicked off in an instant as its jaws closed in on where I was just a moment before. It didn't make a sound, but I could sort of feel it… screaming – and as I looked back, I saw them. Legions of them that had emerged from the buildings I'd passed, sprouting from the tops, twisting around the sides. Snakes or…worms, or villi or something, each with an animal head, some growing out of each other, some diving into the buildings again. I hoped that just meant they were leaving.

Eyes front, I told myself. I wish I hadn't, it was just more bad news – a whole forest of them, already rising between me and the next rooftop. Fast. Gotta go fast. No problem. Yeah. Fast was what I did, and a bunch of stupid… heady…necky things were nothing compared to slipping out of a warehouse full of pissy magical girls, or even one or two friendly ones on a bad day. My chest burned as I forced my legs to go go go, whirling around a lion, diving between a some kind of bastard rabbit and a Salvador Dali rooster. The roof ahead of me seemed to drop off into nothing. Good. Jumping was way easier than trying to clamber up one of these buildings. It was probably only a story or…or two.

I could manage that.

My confidence drained as the edge drew closer and closer, and a knot welled up in the pit of my stomach. That was probably five or six meters easy, and they were already down there, waiting. And the next building was a climb. A short one, but it was probably more than I could get up in one go. …I was really in over my head. I was probably going to die, and the world would be denied its most awesome teenage reporter. …I jumped anyway. Well, I had to, right?

Deep breaths. You've done this a thousand times. Make sure there's as much horizontal momentum as you can when you jump…no problem. Done. I was basically a freakin' blur, here. Lean in, keep your knees bent so they absorb the impact instead of snapping like twigs. Land on the balls of your feet-

The shock of the next roof came all at once, but I was ready. Thousand times. Done it a thousand times. The force of impact jolted through my legs as I threw myself forward, tucking my camera in close as I whirled through the air. The back of my shoulder hit cold, black not-cement, and I rolled off to the side before kicking off again. …I was gonna feel that in the morning. My legs didn't even want to cooperate now, and my stride turned heavy and uneven.

I lurched out of the way of another lunge, forcing my stupid, dumb, aching legs to move. Just like thunder, Izumi, come on! The world around me had become a jungle of black, with only flakes of white from the sky to show me where to slip through. My lungs were burning. My legs were numb. It was like my silhouette was fading into all of theirs. A strange sound, a buzzing noise, started to tear at my ears growing louder and louder as I neared the edge of the building.

I heard a voice, I thought. One I hadn't heard since middle school. A familiar, sweet scent filled the air for just a moment, and…I guess it cleared my head. Took some of the ache away. With a new spring in my step I broke through the last line of creatures, ignoring a heavy thud behind, me, and my eyes flicked up to the roof of the next building.

"You idiot!" crackled a voice above me – a motorcycle helmet attached to a small shape leaning over the edge of the roof. "What the hell were you trying to do? Die?" I didn't bother replying. Instead, I leapt at the wall, dug my shoe into it and kicked off, up toward Rank Leader Malal. She held her crowbar out – just within my reach, just barely – and I grabbed on. Like we'd done it a million times. She grabbed my arm and hauled me up, cursing the whole time.

It wasn't a silhouette for her. I guess she could just ignore that with Super Culexus Powers or something.

"You said to haul ass." It was kind of familiar, somehow. I could still feel her glove on my arm – she hadn't let go right away, and she was digging in hard. "I wanted to see this, so…"

"I didn't mean…Look, I could have gone out and gotten you. You're USUALLY right where it's the least convenient, so… …so this is really no exception." Her grip on my arm loosened, then she let go. "…Might want to get that camera going, those things aren't going to last for very long."

Those…? I scooted back over to the edge again, and in a flash I brought my camera to my eye.

It was…it would be a bloodbath, if, I guess, these things had blood-oh. Oh, they did. Wow. Blood or some kind of goo, hard to tell. Either way, in those few moments, the Warmaster - nothing but a monster's dark silhouette with hair floating gracefully behind her – had turned the entire roof into a mess. I mean, I couldn't tell? It was all totally black. But as her chainsaw sword roared, the impression of a sound echoing through the whole barrier…chunks of things flew in arcs of ichor, shooting stars in the white of the sky. Shaped like animal heads.

And, uh, chunks. I guess that's a shape.

"This is probably the coolest thing I've ever seen. Also kind of gross!" I chirped to Malal after a couple of minutes – when they'd been more or less cleared out – but she just grunted (I think that's what it was) and kept fiddling with her tablet. And once the Warmaster was on her way back over to us, she stood at length and held out her hand.

"How are your legs?" Good question. I wobbled a little as she helped me up, and my knees still hurt a lot more than I really wanted to let on. I was…probably not going to school tomorrow.

"Not broken!" It was all I could promise, and she nodded, as if to say 'good enough'.

It was a relief, being able to breathe again. Malal could ward off the worst of the barrier's effects on me if I stuck close, I guess, and I could even see a couple of my colors coming back. Which was great, I was sort of used to those. We were perched on one of the statue's arms, now, as the two of them dragged me through the rest of the maze. Mostly Malal – I wasn't sure the Warmaster had even noticed me in whatever blood-haze she was in.

While I was finally starting to become more than an obscenely cute shadow again, the Warmaster didn't bother. Or couldn't. Or just didn't need to. She was pretty easy to make out anyway, even among the mass of familiars. She was the one that hadn't gotten ripped apart by a chainsaw yet, an almost skeletal-seeming figure of eerie grace, moving from one familiar corpse to the next.

It was the witch she was fighting now. I'd never seen one before, and I was kind of surprised. She almost looked normal, almost looked like one of us, but ragged. Miserable. Trying to watch her kind of hurt my brain, so I wasn't looking forward to the footage later; no matter where you turned, it was always a side view, always a silhouette in two dimensions of a girl with her hands clasped in prayer, her familiars – along with trees that seemed to sprout out of nowhere, spawning more and more branches to try and skewer the Warmaster, or block off her movement, or delay the inevitable face-sawing.

It didn't work for very long. Even when she landed a branch, or her familiar got a hold on Kharn, it was glancing. It was on her freaky gauntlets or her weird monster legs, or it was caught by her sword and whatever it was just got shredded anyway.

…I kinda felt bad for the witch, though Malal just kind of snorted when I told her. When Kharn caught her, it was… not fast, and it was not kind. Well, she probably meant to be fast, and it was probably kinder than it could have been, but I saw her buzzing bastard sword dig into the witch, then sink into its body, teeth gnawing at it from the inside, hurling shadowy ichor everywhere.

With a jerk of her arm, she ripped through the rest of its body, and with another, she removed its head. A practiced motion, it seemed like – she caught it, even as the witch's body started to fade, and she flicked black blood off of her sword as though it were second nature, and the world started to disappear around us. My organs seemed to swell again – did this happen to them? Did you get used to that? – and for a moment I blacked out as everything crashed together.

"Malal, you brought me a present! Is it party time now? It is party time now, yes?" Her voice was loud and powerful, and it just about made me leap out of my skin as an ice-cold metal hand clamped onto mine, followed by a leather glove on the other. The two of them helped me back up, and all at once the ache in my legs returned.

…I didn't mean to. I really didn't. But I sort of fell into her arms. Into the Warmaster's. Her chest was soft, inches from my nose, and just slightly exposed, and I could smell-wait, wait. No. I'm not getting into that.

I yanked myself away, my eyes drifting from her chest to her face, to a stunning (but kind of scary) grin, and eyes filled with excitement and an almost childlike joy. I opened my mouth to speak, but my words died on my lips. I wasn't sure how to feel. I was definitely…kind of terrified, but something about her was kind of intoxicating, too...My face started to heat up, and she grabbed my camera strap, practically holding me in place as a steely, sharp finger played its way under my chin.

"Kharn. Kharn, stop it. NECO, stop it. I'm not saving you again tonight. She'll break you." Malal glanced up from her tablet, but didn't really do much more. …She sort of sounded like a pet owner whose cats should know better.

"Oh, this is NECO? Well. I am wondering now if I can make you purr…" My knees wobbled under me, and all I could do was nod.

"Dammit, Kharn, she's not here for that." This time she pushed her way between us, prying the Warmaster's hand off of my camera strap in the process. I clutched it myself and looked down, like I needed to toy with my camera. I just…I just had to stop looking at her. She was a sparkler. She was like, the sparklest. She probably had mystic eyes of enchantment, or something weird like that. That was it. I wasn't…I wasn't even interested in girls like her. In girls.

“No. There wasn’t. Aside from maybe ‘don’t molest reporters, it’s terrible PR’.”

“No, no…it was ‘A cat is also fine’. Yes, I am sure that was it.” She beamed, and my knees buckled under me. I instinctively pulled my camera out from under me as I was falling, and then everything went dark.

It was just exhaustion. Malal dropped me off at home and told me to stay off my feet for a few days. She stressed that they wouldn’t be around to check on me, so I’d better listen the first time. And that I was lucky Kharn didn’t take me to her rape den, whatever that was. …It sounded really familiar. Except the rape den part. That didn’t usually come up much. But at the time, I was really too tired to care.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 11/01/13(Fri)08:51 No.28050468

Right, you've had enough of being glared at. The morning's barely even started and already it's looking like a very long day, with only dinner with Midori at the very end of it to look forward to. As much as you'd like to fast forward to that, you still need to wade through an entire ocean of bullshit to get through it.

It's after lighting a cigarette - and burning it down halfway through its filter with one deep pull - that you break the silence between you and the last remaining Culexus of the Ninth. Using your own innate talent for diplomacy.

So, this Girl A, you speak, after blowing a veritable cloud of smoke towards the skull-helmed Culexus. The girl who betrayed her own Officio to the Ninth. The girl who pretty much gave her comrades over to be purged. The girls whose friends you killed in front of her.

Just how fucked in the head is she?

>> ☐ Deculture 11/01/13(Fri)08:52 No.28050475

You saw the punch coming - and had dodged it neatly by simply leaning to the side - but you didn't see the padded, studded knee hurtling towards your gut.

It hurt. It wasn't the sort of searing, burning pain that lanced right through your core when Lucius managed that lucky stab, but it tasted all the same, and knocked the wind right out of you. You stagger back here, coughing, trying your best not to spew your breakfast down the front of your costume - when the other punch clocks you clean in your jaw, knocking your Warmaster Cap clean off your head and your cigarette flying. You taste your own blood in your mouth - twice in as many days - as you watch your cigarette land on the tiled elevator floor with a scattering of embers, dying pathetically there.

"Take it back." Yuma snarls at you, her helmet vox turning the threat into a rough-edged snarl. The Culexus advancing towards you with both gloved hands held up and curled into fists. Reminding you of a blue-haired Eversor that seemed to go into automatic Bitch Mode whenever she sensed you being in the same fucking building. "Take it back, you bitch."

Heh. This is almost nostalgic.

How do you react?

Anyhoo. One punch we can let pass, getting kneed is just us being lazy, but the second punch is too far. She killed our cig and knocked off the cap.

As much as I want to be on good terms with her, we are the Warmaster. This shit does not fly.

Once(if) we get her onto the ground. We can present an ultimatum. Either she works with us here and she helps us talk to Girl A with as little friction as possible. Or she gets to stand at the door while we walk in, eldritch abomination that haunts her dreams in tow.

Yuma sounds like a case that has been allowed to steam in her own misery for too long. It has gotten to the point where her prevalent emotion is blatant distaste or outright hatred towards anyone even remotely involved with Malal's death, us and Kharn at the forefront. Looks like she doesn't even give a shit what happens to her as long as she gets to prove a point, hence the point.

She's fucking dangerous. A loose cannon. If the Prophet were to offer her a chance to get back at us, Pinky and Kharn, I bet she'd jump at it. We shoul be prepared to put a bullet through her skull at the first signs of betrayal, only Culexus or not.

If anyone else tried suckerpunching us for asking a question, we'd probably kneecap them for insubordination. -Or probably punch them into a wall.

The people who we wouldn't blow the kneecaps off are our trusted circle who wouldn't suckerpunch us, and Sayaka. And we won't kneecap Sayaka because we've got an agreement with her that she's supposed to slap us upside the head if we're really doing something stupid.

Suckerpunching your boss just once is "out of control". Try it in your job and see how fast you get fired, or "retired".

What's important isn't kicking the shit out of her, though getting a kick in would be appropriate.

What IS important is telling her that we're asking about her friend's mental health because WE CARE about not making her freak out. We don't give a shit if she's mentally unstable, considering we, Kharn, Sayaka, and goddamn 3/4 of the officio is fucked in the head - anyone who's a magical girl's mentally unstable.

What we need to impress on her is that we're not out to terrorise her friend, even if we're not letting her get off easy for assaulting us. -And we really shouldn't let her get off for doing that.

What line of service does the Officio provide? It's combat related services.

Tempers can flare and when it comes down to it, training and instincts can kick in and fights DO happen, especially in the military.

>>28050831

Yes, you are expected to act appropriately at all times. SO IS THE COMMANDING OFFICER. Getting pulling into the fight is NOT appropriate conduct for an officer. There is brig time, or court martial, or in the case of the officio, likely docked pay.

However, it is not always necessary to invoke these sanctions. Especially if both parties serve in combat together. The informal approaches work to help smooth things out and not leave bad blood between them which might come back to bite at a very bad time.

It's times like these that you surprise yourself. After how you reduced Lucius and her two goons to paste back at the stadium, you thought you'd be at least tapped out temporarily with the whole 'murderous aggression' thing.

Turns out you're not.

Yes, you knew you were going to smash your cranium into what should be bulletproof plexiglass and whatever kind of material they made the helmet part of the Anima Speculum nowadays.

But even as it felt like a thousand blinding migraines happening all at once in a split second as your forehead connected with the uppermost curve of her helmet, the squawk of hurt surprise issuing from Yuma's vox sounded like it was worth it. The gasp that she wheezed out when you returned her gut-check with one of your own pure music to your ears.

As she herself staggers back - leaning against the wall of the elevator - it's here that you draw the Golden Desert Eagle from your inventory, the cold metal of the oversized firearm immediately growing warm in your grasp. But instead of undoing the safety and blasting out her kneecaps - as instinct and something else entirely tugged at your every cell in your body to do so - you toss the gun up into the air to catch it by its barrel instead. Moving towards the stunned Culexus all the while. A small, thin smile curling your lips.

Your first hit crashes against her visor, snapping her head to the side. The second, delivered on the backswing, slaps against the side of her helmet with a solid crack, and it's here that bits of polished, curved plexiglass clatter to the floor like broken teeth spilling from a freshly kicked-in mouth. The third and final one crunches down from above, sending her sprawling on her hands and knees in front of you. Almost as if you'd sent her into that position by design, to look as if she's begging for forgiveness.

You let out a sigh and shove the Golden Desert Eagle back into your inventory. The moment you let go of the grip is the moment that you suddenly feel cold, the aches and pains of last night suddenly coming to the fore. Above all else, you suddenly feel tired; tired of talking to people, tired of trying to be reasonable, and tired of hurting people when all you want to do is to curl up in your chair and eat pancakes until you die.

The elevator grinds to a halt as you slap the 'Elevator Stop' button with the heel of your hand. Freezing your ride down below between the 8th and 9th floor of the building.

Another sigh escapes your lips, before you look down at the Culexus you've just beaten up. Watching your own broken reflection from her cracked visor.

It's here that you tell her, in the calmest and most level voice that you can muster at the moment - that you're going to start over with her. Try things again. You're both Magical Girls - everyone you know that's working this same gig is fucked in the head. Sayaka, Kyoko, and even Mami. Everyone's broken to some extent, one way or another. You needed to know if Girl A - Amane Haruka - was just as crazy as you, or worse. That was all you meant. The rest, she could write off as you being crazy too, but in the way that makes you an asshole.

Yuma snorts at this, but ignore it as you continue. You were actually going to have her as a mediator, to try and work around Girl A's mental instability by having the Culexus be the one to ask her the questions, rather than you barging in and hitting every nerve to set her off by being said asshole. But of course, Yuma had to go and be stupid. You'll forgive her for that mistake - maybe - if she at least gives you a fucking chance to do this properly, and not keep jumping on your ass at the smallest goddamn thing.

If Yuma thinks she can get herself to do that, you tell her, then the both of you can work together to make sure Girl A doesn't go over the deep end. If not, well, you'll handle Girl A like you handle everything - with a short temper and a gun in your hand.

You hold out your hand towards her, offering it.

"You don't remember." The Culexus shakes her head again as she chuckles hollowly, apropos of nothing. "Yeah, I know. Mami-san told me. Kyuubey told me. Even Kyoko-san made sure to remind me. Honestly, I really tried, Warmaster." She looks up at you, at your hand, and you swear you could see her eye peeking through one of the cracks in her visor. "But to hear you talk like you didn't do SHIT to her - I'm sorry. I lost control. I wanted to kill you."

She takes your hand with a strong, sure grip, and you pull her up to her feet. ...She's not as light as she looks, what with her being just a few inches shorter than you, the same height as Kumatora. Must be the Culexus suit. You hear her grumble thanks, before she leans down and snatches your Warmaster Cap off of the floor, patting bits of visor away from it. She holds it out to you a moment later, and you take it with thanks of your own.

"You've broken Haruka, Warmaster. That's all I can tell you." Yuma shakes her head. "We spent the better half of her stay here diving into her mind and piecing her back together. After she came to our side and helped us identify who needed to be purged from our Officio, after she told us where her friends were hiding, something in her snapped. She just stopped living, like she died and forgot to lie down."

You let the Culexus continue - it seems that the brief altercation, along with your frank assurance of her - that got her to talk, and it doesn't look like she's stopping until she's done.

"It took us weeks of rehabilitation, Miss Malal diving into her mind for das on end to piece her back together. When we got her to return, she was more sad than happy, like we've fucked up somehow. And do you know why, Warmaster?" She gestures towards you. "She saw you in her future. The only prediction that came to her when she broke down. About you coming back into her life and finishing the job you started."

You frown at this. If that's the case, then you definitely need Yuma as your mediator, then. She doesn't need to see you or talk to you, you just need some questions relayed so they can be answered.

"...That's what I've been trying to tell her, Warmaster." The Culexus shakes her head. "Haruka knows that one way or another, it'll happen. She wants you to be the one to go into the Silent Room, look her in the eye, and ask her your questions. She knows that the moment she sees you is when her nightmares become reality."

What, like Pinky sneaking up behind her and snacking on her soul?

"That's just one of them." Yuma nods. "Some of them involve you tearing out her heart and eating it. Others involve you standing in the middle of a ring of twenty golden swords, and you laughing as the world ends around you."

Well, that's a hell of a thing, then.

"...Warmaster." Yuma says again. "I--"

Chiaki, you correct her. Warmaster's if she pisses you off again. Yuma shakes her head.

"No, Warmaster, we're not that familiar with each other. Still, I...wish to ask you to please, try not to hurt Amane Haruka. She's been through a lot." She pauses, here, clearly uncomfortable with the formal, stiff way of speaking, but tries valiantly to continue nonetheless. "I apologize for my infraction earlier, and will be sure to report to the Equerry for the proper disciplinary action as befits insubordination. Just grant me this last request, and you won't get any trouble from me."

How do you respond?

But this isn't some random visit for terrorizing, or wanting to know what's on the menu next friday. You're dealing with a serious case, with far wider consequences than for just this officio - you do, in fact, need to follow up on every potential lead you can find. "You didn't ask." still applies, and that doesn't mean the incubators don't lie to their employees either.

Look at it from their perspective.

You have your warmaster who needs to run her officio, handle world-ending level events, keep in peak form, escort space idols, and other 1st level shit.

You learn that her sister has been kidnapped and taken basically prisoner by your brother's contractees. This could damage your warmaster's ability to operate or at least distract her from what her goals should be.

So you just don't tell her. Problem solved. Don't let her find out, no reason for her to have to deal with the problems of lesser officio's she's WM of the first.

I'm saying that from the perspective of the incubator of the first. The incubator knows about the merger and probably about Haruka being taken in by the 9th. But he might not tell his warmaster to prevent it from ever becoming an issue.

Of course this is just the directions my shadowruns are propelling me, I'm firmly in the party that believes the Incubators are still manipulating the officios to their own ends.

After a moment's consideration, you nod. Request granted. You'll do your best to make sure even a single hair on Girl A's head isn't harmed but you can't promise that things won't turn out weird.

Yuma nods here, just as you reach over to get the elevator moving again. "That's the best I can hope for, Warmaster, so I'll settle with that. Thank you. I'll report to Miss Sayaka after we're done."

Huh? what for?

"For..." The Culexus seems to hesitate, here. "For my disciplinary action, Warmaster. I did attack you."

You shake your head. She beat you up, and you beat her up in return. That's punishment enough as far as you're concerned. But if she's looking for more, her punishment can be to stop giving Kyoko the cold shoulder. It's...how do you even get to that? You're an insufferable bitch, and you like Kyoko. Hell, Sayaka's the biggest bitch around and she loves Kyoko. What did Kyoko do, piss chocolate milk into her cornflakes?

"What? I..." Yuma seems stunned at this. "No, nothing like that...i-it's personal, Warmaster, but nothing that needs to be talked about. I'll...see what I can do."

It's here that you also notice the damage you've done to Yuma's helmet. ...Wait, if you damaged her suit, then why aren't you painting the walls with your sick five minutes ago?

"Oh, this? This is just superficial damage, Miss Matsuda." The Culexus taps her visor. "We have a secondary seal beneath that's sort of a failsafe. Our suit also automatically compensates for any loss of performance from damage, but that's more of a temporary thing. Anyway, this isn't as major as it looks." A chuckle. "That, and I'm not the Culexus Miss Malal is."

Really? Well. That's something.

It's only here that you realize that Yuma used 'is', not 'was', like you usually would use for dead people.

You don't bring attention to it. Could have just been a mistake.

Even so, she's certainly done a lot to make sure people remember her.

A few moments later and a bit of walking, and you finally arrive at Amane Hazuki's Silent Room.
The entire floor, it looks like, has been cleared away - you can spot places where they'd uprooted upholstery and fixtures in an attempt to turn the place clean, stringent, featureless. The Silent Room at the very center the only other feature in it - besides, of course, the automated gun turrets bristling from every corner of the floor, all of them aimed towards the small apartment-sized cube Amane Hazuki was imprisoned in.

"For security," Yuma says as you frown at the hundred or so loaded barrels tracking your every move. "They're keyed not to fire at anyone from the Ninth, don't worry."

You weren't worried about that. You were worried about how much firepower Kyuubey thinks he needs to have one broken girl guarded.

"Better to have it and not need it, than need it and not have it." Yuma replies as she steps up in front of the large, steel door leading to the Silent Room, tapping out a five-digit number on the glowing keypad on its side. "Alright. Wait here, Warmaster. I'll go in first, announce you're here, and when I call, you step in." She looks at you. "And please, keep your Hat in your inventory. It'll remind her of the Betrayer."

Ah. Right. You stuff the symbol of office into your inventory. That's fixed.

"Alright..." There's a large creak as the Culexus tugs on the large door handle welded into thick steel, and she slips through the gap between the door and jamb as soon as enough room presented itself. You immediately catch the whiff of...something. Tea, it smells like. Freshly brewed. ...Wait, she's brewing tea inside a Silent Room?

You hear a muffled conversation from behind the door. The steel's too thick for anything to clearly carry across, but from the vox-static from Yuma's helmet, you know they're having a very intimate conversation.

>> ☐ Deculture 11/01/13(Fri)13:46 No.28052969

You hear a giggle, then, and the sound of delicate crockery shifting around - and it's here that Yuma pokes her head from behind the door. "Come in, Warmaster. She's ready."

You do so, excusing yourself from the intrusion - and you blink as you see that the Silent Room is...well, it's certainly furnished. A really comfortable looking four-poster bed was at one side, along with a small but elegantly-wrought closet carved from mahogany. The floor is carpeted, and there's a small kitchen at the far corner, where a tea kettle cooled on a single stove, alongside a rice cooker. The scent of freshly-baked cupcakes teasing your nostrils.

And then, suddenly, it happens. A sudden change in the air. A gasp of breath, followed by the sound of a tray of delicate crockery shattering into a million pieces on ceramic-tiled floor. You turn towards the source of the noise, and see a pale Amane Haruka, skin almost as pale as her hair, her eyes wide and staring. Her now-empty hands grabbing, twisting at her simple white dress, as she tried to say something but couldn't choke it out.

"Haruka-chan? Haruka-chan, no, it's...it's not Murderface. Haruka-chan!" Yuma steps forward, both gloved hands held out to placate. "Please, don't--"

She starts screaming. Loud, long, keening and fearful. Blood-churning screams usually reserved to those slowly being hacked into pieces, or someone whose soul is being eaten by a pink-haired eldritchian nightmare.

Screaming as though she would never stop.

And surprisingly - disturbingly - at the same time that your Shield started clicking.

How do you react?

Mitakihara City. It'd been almost six months since I'd been here – hadn't gotten to sit still for more than a couple of days at most since everything went to hell. Hadn't gotten a lot of time before Nico…happened, either. …She probably had another girlfriend by now. She probably didn't really need me anyway. Not with Miss Tomoe there. A billion useless, depressing thoughts raced through my head as I stepped into of the exit terminal at the airport. …But… one thought outweighed all the rest of them.

After months of running and hiding, I was going to see her again. I was going to see Murderface for the first time in forever. …Kinda made the bullshit worth it. We could figure out what to do about the rest. Maybe I could get the Ninth to take Lily and Sab in for now, and Nakajima'd probably come too if we had a plan for bailing Annie's dumb ass-

"Wendy-san!" I nearly leapt out of my skin at the sound of Miss Tomoe's voice. …It felt a little like returning home, already, as she crossed the terminal with long, purposeful strides. I offered half a wave before my blood ran cold.

(1/16) (I am sincerely sorry for this)

How did she know I was going to be here? We were supposed to be KIA, and I was damn sure the Ninth didn't have a bead on our location even if they didn't buy it; if they did, I probably would have had to gut Mickey by now. If Mami saw my face fall, if she saw my fingers clench around a knife that wasn't there – one I had to force not to appear – she hid it well as she approached me and squeezed my hand.

"I'm sorry about this, but I need to see you before you do anything else." She tugged hard on my hand, but I didn't move right away. Our eyes met for a moment, and the warm honey-gold in hers seemed to ice over. This wasn't a request, she was telling me. So I…let her do it. I let her lead me off, out of the airport. She had a cab waiting and everything.

…She knew exactly when I'd be here, and it set my teeth on edge. Somebody was a stupid asshole that was going to get us all purged, and when I got back – if I got back – I was going to start skinning people until I found out who.

"Viola called me in advance." Well. That narrowed down the skinning step. "She thought it might be best to…make sure we were aware that we'd misunderstood the situation." So she wanted to make sure nobody shot me in the head while I was here. …I didn't believe that; V wasn't that kind or that stupid. Miss Tomoe was sugarcoating it. I just nodded, hands fidgeting in my lap.

We were sitting together in a deluxe suite in some upper-end hotel that I didn't catch the name of, supposedly some of the stiffer competition for the king shit of Japanese hotels here, The Hotel. Couldn't exactly argue with that reputation, though – the room nicer than the Equerry chambers back in Santa Destroy. Might have been nicer than the twins' room, too. You couldn't even see the semen stains on the ceiling from whatever freaky bullshit the upper-class in Mitakihara did with the prostitutes here - it was almost like they weren't even there.

The tea Miss Tomoe had prepared was hot and sweet, with a little milk and honey she'd poured for me herself. It felt strange in my mouth. …Guess I hadn't had anything but water, whiskey, and the occasional can of Hassy since we'd left the city. Maybe it was just…warmer than I was used to. Or kinder. Or maybe I just missed Miss Tomoe, too.

The two of us sat in silence for a long time – most of a cup of tea, downed with thought and trepidation. She looked like she had a lot she wanted to say, and her half-lidded smile was fixated on her teapot. …It looked a little bitter. This was going to be a long meeting, and not in any kind of good way.

"She doesn't remember you, Wendy." When she finally spoke, she dropped it all at once. A huge, ugly bombshell that made me choke on my tea. I managed to gasp out a 'What?', and she repeated it, quieter now.

"Murderface doesn't remember you. She isn't the same person anymore." She poured a cup of tea with a nonchalance that sort of disturbed me, and leaned over to refill mine as well. "She's…better now."

…Better? I barely managed to creak out a noise. My heart had stopped. My voice didn't want to cooperate.

"She's going by a new name now, and she's…working off some bad habits. Some of the things I tried to teach her that didn't quite work out before are sticking now. You know, she managed to navigate her way through a very messy situation involving an idol company recently… …It wasn't perfect, but I'm awfully proud of her."

She took a sip, apparently musing on what she wanted to say next. Or watching for my response. My eyes stayed locked onto hers, and my hand twitched.

Why was this supposed to be okay? Was I supposed to just…be happy about this?

"I've recommended her as the Ninth's next Warmaster, in fact. It isn't a position I'm…especially interested in, myself, and I really think Chiaki-san has real potential." There was an odd emphasis on the new name. She wanted to make sure I remembered it.

…Warmaster? 'I bet I can kill the pitcher from here' Murderface as the Warmaster?

"She's a different person now, Wendy-san. She's finally getting rid of some of the awful habits she'd picked up from Kharn and…" Miss Tomoe nibbled her lip a little, then sighed softly. "And from you, Wendy." She stared into her tea, giving the implications a moment to sink in. …Not that they needed to. It hit me almost as hard as the amnesia.

Oh. Oh fuck no. She was trying to tell me I wasn’t good enough for her little girl anymore.

“Wendy, please. That isn’t the only reason. If it were just that…we could have a few words, you could promise me a few things, and maybe if you let me chaperone you two for a while…well, we could come to an agreement. But that isn’t the worst of it.” She breathed deep, her eyes catching mine again and freezing ice-cold.

“…I’m sorry, but to be completely and brutally honest, we have no concrete way of even verifying that you are who you claim to be. Do you understand? Disappearing for nearly half a year and reappearing just in time to take advantage of a fledgling Warmaster – and one compromised by memory loss, as well - the timing is a little odd, wouldn’t you agree?” I felt like my soul was being drilled through as she fixed those piercing eyes on mine. …My knife had come home of its own accord again, and my hand squeezed around the handle in my lap.

No. No, I don’t fucking agree. …My voice cracked. She had no idea. She had no idea all how much shit I’d been through in the past few months, with Nico, and Annie, and whatever the hell Mary’d turned herself into, and…and the fucking church, and the First-

“Shhh. Shhh. …I’d like to do what I can for you, Wendy. But it would be much easier for the both of us if you would just…read between the lines for me.” Her finger traced the edge of her teacup as our staredown broke. “I know subtlety isn’t necessarily something the Rabbits do well, but-“

But fuck off. Run away and never return. And you don’t even have the balls to just say it.

“Wendy, that isn’t what I meant. But showing up out of nowhere isn’t helping-“ I slammed my hands on the table, nearly upending it, and pushed myself to my feet.

I was going to see her. I needed to see her.

“She isn’t even in the country right now, Wendy-san. And I’m rather glad, in the state you’re in.” She saw it. The knife in my hand. Her tone turned to frigid steel, and she quietly set her cup down. I could see it. I could practically hear it. The muscles in her body were tense. She was ready for things to go south any moment now.

It hurt. It really hurt. I didn’t want Miss Tomoe to think of me that way. …But I wanted to put my knife right through her smiling fucking face, too. Still…her body relaxed as she felt my resolve waver.

…It didn’t, not for long. Maybe she thought I was better than this. Maybe she thought she deserved it. Nobody could tell what Mami Tomoe was thinking most of the time. …My arm snapped. I didn’t even mean to do it, exactly, it was like…I don’t know. I wasn’t thinking anymore. I couldn’t see her even if I wanted to. She didn’t remember me. She was better off without me. That’s what Mami was saying. Even if she believed me, it didn’t matter.

Fuck her.

Silver flashed through the air, and everything seemed to move in slow motion. I could swear I saw perfect blonde curls reflect off of the steel of my knife as it flew, and then, nothing. …She was expecting it, naturally. Miss Tomoe was First material, I heard people say. An excellent negotiator. A peerless magical girl. A marksman without equal, and a fighter that could hold her own against the Betrayer if she needed to. A paragon, a shining, golden goddess.

My body reacted before my brain. Instinct, I guess. Maybe I heard the click of rifle's hammer. She'd pulled one from nothing, as she dove, and more rained from the ceiling, the muzzles digging unnaturally into the carpet. The shot shaved a few brown hairs away from one of my braids as I dove and rolled myself; it would have been dead center if I'd reacted a millisecond later, and the hole in the wall behind me argued that it would have taken most of my upper body with it.

What the flying fuck did she put in those things?

She was up in a flash, and yellow ribbons spread out from her like a spiderweb as she effortlessly drew the next musket and fired. Another near miss, but that was all I was going to get if I didn't get the hell out of this crowded space. She'd have me pinned in no time with those fucking ribbons. I tore through the hole she'd made into the neighboring room. Soft clicking noises surrounded me as more and more muskets fell out of pentagrams in the air, and a hail of percussion sounded from behind me.

Shot after shot, barely avoided. My scarf was in tatters already from near-misses as it flailed behind me. She wasn't aiming at my head, or even center-mass now. She was herding me away from the windows, I think. Keeping me from bailing outside, where it'd be harder to follow me.

I risked a glance over my shoulder after the third room we passed through. She was keeping pace like it was nothing- bounding through walls and over debris, scooping up and firing rifles with an effortless grace, ribbons spiraling out in torrents. Looked like she was feeding them out into the hallway, too. …Worse, though, was her expression.

It wasn't a glare. It wasn't even a frown. It was…nothing. A serene, empty expression, the kind of face I figured she made while she trimmed bonsai trees or something. Every shot threatened to blow my body into a fine mist, including the reconstructed pile of hate and debris that passed for my soul gem, and she didn't seem to feel any particular way about it.

Guess that's why they're the Murderers. The Ninth is just as bad as us. Maybe worse; least we have the dignity to show we're monsters. We're not just…liquid cool office ladies chasing down other magical girls like it's nothing. Like it's another appointment, wrecking up some building that'll probably cost tens of thousands to fix. Not to mention the lawsuits, it wasn't like the QB Heavy hard carte blanche in Mitakihara. Mami Tomoe did not give a single fuck about any of that.

Just getting to watch her like this made it almost worth it.

I kicked hard to the side once I crossed into the next room. Changing directions like that killed my momentum and I might even feel it in my ankle later, but as yellow ribbon raced past my body where my throat had been moments prior, I knew I'd made the right choice. Two steps, then the wall - I leapt, kicked off, and – perfect! Miss Tomoe's graceful expression twisted lightly as I tackled her into her own ribbons. I could see just a hint of a shine, tiny strands that crossed the room on top of the few I'd already seen, and I realized she'd been sending razor-thin strips, near-invisible wires along behind me in case her shots didn't discourage me enough.

Well, didn't help her any. She was the one that had to deal with them as they cut through her nice suit and into her skin. After just a moment, they all slackened at once, sending us to the ground together.

I did it in one smooth motion, one I'd already started as I rode Mami Tomoe to the ground – an overhand stab with both hands, with all the force I could put into it. It'd be enough to sink the knife into an ordinary human to its handle, to pin them to the ground entirely. I'd almost done the same to Miss Tomoe as I plunged it into her torso, right under her ribs. I pushed off right away, then, and made a break for the window.

It wouldn't stop her for long. I knew that much as I busted through the window. It might be enough. It'd probably be enough.

My arm groaned a little in protest as I caught my broom about ten feet down, yanking myself up and onto it as I hurtled off into the night. That was close. Way too close. I'd have to stay out of here for a while, probably. …Kinda defeated the purpose of picking a fight in the first place. Shit.

The whole thing jerked a second after I got settled and I nearly fell off the back. The rear end of the broom tilted, dragged down by something soft and sweet and a little too persistent. I knew what it was the moment I felt it, and a quick glance confirmed – yellow ribbons wrapped around the base of my broom, with a still-bleeding office lady clinging to the other end. Hell of a reaction time. Good shot, too, not that I was surprised exactly.

She didn't give me time to think about it, either – she was hurtling up toward me already, reeling her ribbon in like a grappling hook from a video game. I hacked at the stupid ribbon with my knife but it was a no-go – reinforced a couple of times over, seemed like. Guess when you only have two tricks you get really, really good at them. She dodged easily as I hurled the knife down at her (not a surprise there, either, it was half-assed at best; I was busy steering) and I could only hope squeezing a few shots off from my service pistol would slow her down a little more.

It didn't, but it didn't really matter. I had an idea. I pulled down hard, toward another feature of the skyline, an office building. She only had fifteen feet of ribbon left. Even less. This'd be close. I kicked the speed up as hard as I could make my little imaginary broom go, then I made a hard turn.

CRASH. Eat shit, Mami Tomoe. I eased off the throttle back to a more controllable speed as I felt the weight leave my broom. …It was over, I wanted to say. But I was sure I'd heard a shot from inside.

…No, there was another. And another. Shit. Shit shit shit.

As the walls gave way to clear, pristine glass, I saw her there, tearing through the rooms, blowing away the walls. We locked eyes for a moment, and I could swear she smiled. My cheeks burned and my heart skipped a beat as she leveled yet another rifle at me. The shot whistled just past my ear, wrecked one of my braids entirely. …Kinda funny what you remember in situations like that.

Her aim was off while she ran like this, as near as I could guess The glass threw her off, or the unsteady movement of my broom, or the effort of having to keep up while shooting more or less perpendicular. That was about the only break I was going to catch, and I was grateful for it.

…I'm a little embarrassed that it didn't occur to me to just drop down, to just run away. I don't know. Felt like it would have…ruined it, somehow. Like this was something we needed to do. …Maybe I was just having fun, for the first time in months. Maybe I wanted to die.

She burst through the other side of the building in a shower of stars, a cascade of sparkles that would have made any high-budget bullshit mahou shoujo anime look like a crappy B-movie. With a graceful twist the sky became a ballet of yellow ribbons – a cannon blast of yellow confetti to the roof down below, and a graceful hydra that dove for my broom, and for every part of my body. I dove, then, my common sense finally returning to me. It was a little bit too late.

There was a pressure on my wrist, squeezing it tight. A single ribbon. A single goddamn ribbon out of a massive cloud. It tore me away from my mount as Miss Tomoe landed gracefully on the roof. Moments later, I swung into a building that felt like it was made of steel. No glass for Wendy, fuck me. Pretty sure that building still has a dent shaped like my body somewhere between the thirtieth and fortieth floors.

I had a few seconds to pull myself together as she reeled me up the side of the building. She met me with an impassive stare. …She hadn't taken the time to set this up as an arena or anything, aside from the ribbon on my wrist, now tied to a huge bundle of them that were anchored to various things on the roof.

…Kind of surprised she didn't just shoot me after she dragged me up.

Whatever the reason, I didn't waste any time. I wasn't going to kill her. I didn't even want to hurt her. But when I had my footing, I leapt, twisted in the air to catch her throat with my knife as I flew over her. The ribbon on my arm was obnoxious, made me adjust my angle and my stance too much, to keep it from coiling around me. My knife bit into her, but it was shallow, dug into her shoulder instead. Didn't matter. I was on the other side. I had a plan.

The moment my feet hit the roof again, I lunged toward her keeping my body low. It wasn't my best approach, the angle I'd landed at threw me off a little, but I'd adjusted enough, I thought. Enough for my knife to find her stomach and dig in hard.

…She moved off to the side at the last moment, and I moved with her, kicking as the butt of a rifle grazed my shoulder, where my neck had been. I couldn't twist my knife into her, not quickly enough, but my elbow found her stomach instead, and it sent her stumbling away. …The stab from earlier was mostly healed already. Something I'd expect from Mickey, not Miss Tomoe, but she'd probably had to put effort into it.

She was burning a lot of magic for this. I was flattered.

I tried to follow up as she staggered back, but the ribbon on my wrist was too tight, yanking my arm away as I closed in and throwing me off-balance. I caught a fraction of a second of Miss Tomoe’s windup before her rifle collided with the side of my head in a perfect homerun swing, sending me spiraling across the roof.

“…Is that all the rage of your misbegotten kind is worth, Cooldown?” Her words were jagged spears through my gut. This wasn’t the Mami Tomoe I’d spent evenings with before, the one Murderface adored, the one that’d taught me how to make pancakes that made panties drop. She was…something more. Something different.

She crossed the roof soundlessly as I pulled myself back to my feet, fighting back the urge to vomit courtesy of the brand new concussion. There were no rifles now. …I could have finished this already. I should have been able to. Tomoe had kept me off-balance the entire time, and even now, the only time I should have been able to fight, I was tied down. …I had my footing down now. She wouldn’t avoid it this time. Just a few steps closer…closer…

Two steps. No, a step and a half. Faster than a human could have reacted, faster than a human would have even seen, I was on her. I saw it in my head already glancing blow to her stomach, a distraction, then I could sink my knife into her spine. Easy throat shot from there, just in case. …I didn’t want to do it. I didn’t want to hurt her like that.

…Yeah I did. I could already taste her blood in the back of my throat. Sorry, Mami. I let you shoot at me for way longer than I should have. Twenty-one feet for a human. Maybe a third of that for a magical girl. Closer than that, and you’re already dead. That’s the misbegotten rage of the Wonderland Corps. It was shit like this that made it worth it.

The wind whistled by my ears as I moved, as my knife slipped past her stomach in a quick, tight movement. A shallow cut, half-dodged, just like I expected. I kicked to a halt in a flash and extended my arm, bringing it back to sink my knife into her spine, and-

CRACK.

She’d grabbed it. Grabbed onto my wrist in that split second, and jammed her palm into my elbow, bending my arm back unnaturally until it snapped. The pain was excruciating as I kicked away – she hadn’t even let go, and it extended my broken elbow on top of everything else. My knife appeared in my other hand, the ribbon hand, and in a fit of desperation, one last shot, I rocketed toward her, to bring it down onto her face instead.

She whispered something as I hurtled toward her, and I felt her fist impact my midsection…hard. Harder than I’d ever been hit before. Harder than Annie’d ever snuck in on me, harder than I’d gotten from Miss Marigold, even. I could hear my ribs crack, feel my organs rupture as a gout of blood spewed from my mouth and onto Miss Tomoe’s face, as my knife fell from my hand and bounced onto her shoulder.

‘Tiro Finale’, that was what she’d said. Sounded a hell of a lot better than ‘Lolita Crusher’. I’d have to pass it on to Annie.

My vision faded in and out, and I felt the building below me hit my knees, then my hands, then one elbow as my right arm gracefully reminded me it was completely fucked. A few seconds passed before my failing eyesight made out something new – pantyhose-clad knees under a short skirt, settling in in front of me as I was helped back onto my heels.

…She’d wiped the gross vomit-blood off of her face with a handkerchief, and gazed down at me with cool, golden eyes as she did the same for me, for the blood lingering around my mouth. The scent was sweet and overwhelming as she pulled me into her arms, and I could feel my eyes burning as I buried my face in her neck.

…I’m sorry, Mami.

“I know.”

I didn’t mean to.

“I know. You’re a good girl, Wendy. You were just upset.”

I nodded a little as…as it started to rain. Rain that wet the skin of her neck. Made me sniffle as she ran her fingers through my hair, as she urged me to relax. She gingerly removed my tattered scarf and eased my other braid out of its tight tie, and I could feel tight, yellow ribbons wrapping around my body.

Makeshift bandages. Around my broken arm, and around my stomach and my chest, winding in under my dress. My shoulder, the one that had collided with the building, and around my aching neck, with a bow in the back and everything. Heh.

As my body relaxed, as the adrenaline started to fade, I blacked out to a gentle caress and a heavenly scent.

She saw me off a few days later. I kept my promise. Didn’t meet up with anyone else, and she let me stay with her in the meantime. …She listened to me cry about Murderface, and about Nico, and about…all that other shit. We drank hot cocoa together, and watched movies. She cleared her schedule out as much as she could afford to and everything, and sent all kinds of candy and cookies and stuff back with me to take to the others.

…It didn’t make it okay. It just made me want to stay more, and I felt a little awful betraying her trust just a few weeks later. …I just couldn’t stick around for too long. Keep it short. Keep it low-profile. Keep Murderface out of it as much as I could.

I could do that much for her.

I'd say still entirely benevolent but maybe not in anyone else's best interests

Mami has been shown to be a very cold calculating person inside from the flashback and she has the potential to royally fuck a lot of things up

Yet I still get the feeling that above all she won't let her friends come to harm even if it means burning down the world with a beatific smile on her face and a clear conscience

Don't question her motives for they are pure, question her actions

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 11/03/13(Sun)06:11 No.28082414

You are a Magical Girl, and the insane, pink-haired horror of a goddess is trying to catch your attention. And she's doing this by making your Shield - the strange metal disc clamped permanently onto your right arm - start ticking like bomb, one just moments away from exploding.

No, the irony's not lost on you. Or...no, probably not. Whatever. You're not too sure how irony works.

But what you're sure about is that she always does it at the worst possible times - and right now is no exception, with you standing inside a Silent Room, about to talk to one of her victims. A victim who's currently screaming her head off in horror at the sight of you.

...Well, you're not too sure about that, either. Yuma, the Culexus helping you with this little interrogation, was so sure that it was your fault that she punched you out over it. You got back at her for that, but...well. Looking at Amane Haruka now, the girl sobbing uncontrollably in Yuma's arms, all while trying to claw herself free from the Culexus' grasp in an attempt to get as far away from you as possible - you can't help but feel guilty, too.

In the middle of all the screaming, your gaze falls down on the bits of shattered ceramic that used to be teacups speckling the floor in front of you. Three teacups. Yeah, she was expecting you, alright.

"Haruka, please, it's not Murderface, she's not Murderface any more, she--" Yuma tries again, only for her vox speaker to crackle into silence as Haruka's panicked flailing cracks against the face of her helmet. It's here that she turns towards you. "Warmaster! Warmaster Matsuda, get out of here for a moment! I'm going to try something!"

Huh? Oh...oh, yeah. Sure. You step out immediately, the Shield on your arm still clicking - and the moment you're clear from the Silent Room is when you feel a sudden snap of tension in the air, followed by the screams being cut off. No muffling, no tapering into whimpers or anything like that - it's as if Haruka had been switched off, somehow.

There's nothing but dead silence for a moment or so. Then--

"It's okay, Warmaster. You can come back in, now." Yuma calls from inside, sounding strained but otherwise alright. You blink at this, before making for the Silent Room once more. You're just about to step over the threshold when you stop, and glance down at your still-clicking Shield.

Haruka started screaming just a bit after your Shield started clicking, and...well, the latter's still clicking now. There's a chance they might not be related at all, but if they are...

You close your eyes and concentrate briefly. Another snap of tension, and the once-comforting weight of the Shield on your arm vanishes - along with the rest of your costume. Leaving you in your underwear - a simple white sports bra and plain white panties. The golden bracelets still clasped around your wrists, and the Desert Eagle now snug against your frame in a convenient shoulder holster.

No, you're not taking any chances. Not with Pinky.

You don't need to drive this Amane Haruka any more crazy than you need to. You just need to find out who this fucking Prophet is, so you can kill her and prevent Tomoe Mami from being mixed up in any bullshit you did in the past.

"Warmaster?" You hear Yuma call again, and you step into the Silent Room once more, arms crossed over your pitifully-flat chest. "I said you could come in...oh." The Culexus looks up from where she was crouching in front of the mess Haruka made on the floor. Haruka herself is laid out on the bed, peacefully unconscious, her face completely devoid of the frenzied fear contorting it earlier.

"Um. Why are you, uh..." Yuma gestures towards you with a gloved hand, clearly flustered despite the fact that she'd been trying to break your jaw in the elevator earlier. With her fists.

How do you respond?

Thing is, she was an apprentisce to Malal. The gift Malal left us we have to her to investigate.

There is a decent chance that she may know stuff about Pinky or Malal`s Research that might help us in figuring out what to do with Pinky. And yes, we only fed so-so to Coobie, but now we are in Silent Room, so no Coobie around, no Cams around, since it was mentioned when the Silent Rooms showed up that there are no cams in the Silent Room, thus no one give that to Coobie but Yuma and Yuma will probably keep this to herself it we tell her that we are looking to stop Pinky from whatever she plans on pulling with the Golden Weapons.

first as normal homura post PPMM, then when we first regained our memories and then lost them again.

finally there is a reason why we are often called murderface and the name tends to stick with literally everyone.

i think we are, and i'm also still convinced deculture is actually urobuchi because of certain things that have happened in this quest.
part of the reason i do think we actually are homura, is the entire witches barrier part actually, that practically confirmed we were homura at least at one point.
also the fact of our favorite weapons and stuff.
also the scratched shield and whatnot is actually reminiscent of the third movie and all kinds of things.

You shake your head at the Culexus. It's not something you want to talk about, not right now. Maybe some other day, when you're a bit less underdressed in somebody else's room. ...Speaking of which, can Yuma get you something to wear? A towel, maybe a blanket?

The Culexus nods here, standing up and making for the small wooden closet near Haruka's bed. She opens it with a creak of its rusty hinges, and tosses you what looks like the same simple white gown that Haruka's using. It's here that you also remember Midori wearing the same thing, way back then.

You slip it on quickly while thanking Yuma, who simply nods and goes back to the mess of broken crockery on the floor. The gown fits alright, just a bit loose on the chest side. It does the job you want to in any case, as well as remind you how uncomfortable you are in a dress. It feels too...airy, too free. You miss your costume already, even the way the pantyhose sometimes hikes up way too high, especially when you're running--

"I put her to sleep," The Culexus suddenly says from the floor. Sounding more like a confession than anything else.

You blink at her, but say nothing.

"Erased the past few minutes from her short-term memory, too. She won't remember that we came in - she'll think that she just took a brief nap right before we arrived." A series of soft clinking sounds makes you look down - and you see bits and fragments of ceramic slowly hover up into the air and float towards Yuma's gloved hand. Attaching themselves to the teacup handle held out between the Culexus' thumb and forefinger. Beside her, the two other teacups are already repaired, looking as if they were never broken in the first place. "I can wake her up whenever you're ready, Warmaster."

Huh. That's convenient. ...Really convenient.

How do you respond?

[]Wake her up. Let's get started.
[]Wait. Culexus can make people forget?
[]...So, do you like Haruka or what?

Culexus based amnesia is interesting fact, but lets not get into it now.

Similarly, we're dense but not that dense. Yuma obviously has some level of attachment, but its neither our direct business nor are we in any way fit to judge considering the Midori situation.

...Wait, Culexus can do that?

"What, this?" Yuma looks up at you, her visor reflecting your own confused face, just as she gestures with the now fully-repaired teacup. "Oh, this is pretty easy, actually. See, the suit--"

No, no, not that. The thing about making people forget. Culexus can do that at will? ...And can it be done in reverse, make people remember stuff they've forgotten somehow?

The Culexus is silent for a few moments, before shaking her head. "...No, Warmaster. We can only erase memories, and only the ones that qualify as short-term memory. Nothing beyond two, maybe three minutes. Anything more than that, you're risking damaging the person's ability to retain memories, not to mention irrepairable brain damage. Memory restoration..." Another moment of silence, telegraphed by the subtle click of Yuma's speaker switching off due to inactivity. "...well, Miss Malal probably would've been able to do something like that. She was the best of us, after all."

Hnh. Well. That's something to know, you guess. You thank her for the information.

"...Miss Malal didn't make you forget, you know." Once again, Yuma seems to read your mind, here, the vox-corruption in her voice not quite robbing the defensive tone in her words. "She HATED wiping someone's memories, even if it was just to make someone forget something traumatic, like seeing their best friend turn into a Witch right in front of them. She always said memories, good or bad, helped make someone become the person they were meant to be - and just removing them for convenience's sake is disrespecting not only the memory, but the person the memory belongs to."

You frown, here. You didn't even say anything! You're just trying to figure out what's been fucking with your memory, that's all. You're not accusing anyone here, just trying to find out what could've happened--

"And I'm saying you're wrong. Miss Malal couldn't have made you forget. It's just not like her."

...Fine, fine. You're not in the mood to argue right now, anyway. Can she go ahead and wake Sleeping Beauty already, before you freeze? Transformed, the Silent Room was already a bit nippy, but untransformed, it feels like you're standing in a fucking freezer.

Yuma shakes her head again, grumbling something underneath her breath. Placing the teacups back on the sink in the room's mini-kitchen, the Culexus moves back to the bed - and she wakes Haruka by shaking her shoulder gently. "Haruka-chan? Haruka-chan, we're here. Wake up."

"Nnh...Yuma-san...?" The blonde girl murmurs, her words slurring slightly, as if waking from a very deep sleep, instead of a Culexus-induced five minute nap. "I...I was making tea and cupcakes for us, and..." It's here that she suddenly sits up, panicked. "T-the tea! The tea, I was boiling it, and--"

"No, no, it's fine, it's fine," Yuma says soothingly - or as soothingly as she could be, with her voice digitized and corrupted by her vox's helm speakers. "I took care of it. It's fine." She cocks her helmet toward you. "The...um...the person you wanted to talk to is here."

"The person I wanted...?" Haruka turns to look at you - and the bewildered look she had is suddenly replaced with a cool, emotionless mask. "...Ah. I...I see." The smallest frown curling her lips, she turns back towards Yuma. "Is...is it alright if you wait outside for a few minutes, Yuma-san? I just need to talk to her in private for now." It's here that she places a hand on the Culexus' gloved own. "Just like we talked about, remember?"

"Yes, but..." Yuma starts to protest. "I'm supposed to be here, and--"

"I'll be fine. I promise." Haruka smiles, thinly. "I'll call you if I need you. We talked about that too, right?"

The Culexus turns to look at you for a brief moment, before turning back to Haruka and nodding, a sigh escaping her speakers. She briskly steps past you, grumbling all the while, and it's here that you hear the thick, steel door give a dull, gong-like sound - as if someone from outside had suddenly just punched it with a gloved, studded fist.

...Angry kid. Almost like a certain blue-haired Eversor, but not as bad.

"She's kinder than you think." Haruka says softly, her bright blue eyes trained at the door where Yuma had just slipped through. "She's been through a lot as a child, but she's never let it affect how she deals with people. Except in this kind of way, I suppose." She turns towards you, and nods. "Chiaki Matsuda, I presume? Warmaster of the Eighth? Formerly known as Murderface?"

You nod, here. Pretty much that, yes.

"I see." She looks down at her hands - and you manage to see them shivering, just before she clasps them together. "...Please give me some time. I need to prepare myself." The blonde swallows audibly, before carefully getting up off of the bed. "It's not every day you get visited by your preordained murderer, much less play host to the one who will end the world."

You frown at this, but nod anyway. Haruka murmurs her thanks, and bustles about her kitchen with the air of a professional housewife pressed to entertain unexpected guests. And she only does take a few moments, after which she's already set the small dining table with fresh tea and cupcakes. She gestures for you to sit, and you do so after a moment's hesitation.

"It's blueberry, if you're curious." Haruka nods towards the cupcake on your plate. "It's not poisoned, don't worry. Neither is the tea, it's Earl Grey."

How do you respond?

You let out a frustrated hiss between your teeth. What the FUCK is up with everyone saying that you'll end the fucking world, anyway? You don't want to destroy it, it's where you fucking live! All your friends are here - at least, the ones you haven't either accidentally killed or made your enemies! You LIKE this world. The last thing you want to do is blow it up!

"Now there speaks someone who thinks she has a choice in the matter." Haruka gestures to the tea. "We'll get to that later. Please, enjoy the tea while it's still hot. It won't taste as good if I re-heat it a second time."

A second time? Wait, does she remember what Yuma did?

"I don't. But one can easily infer." She gestures towards the tea kettle. "For example, how I remember boiling enough tea for three people, but find that not only is my tea kettle nearly empty, but it's also gone cold - despite my having no memory of pouring any tea for anyone in the first place. And I'm sure neither you or Yuma are into tea." Haruka offers you a small smile. "Please, don't tell her. She has suffered enough, and I don't want to add to her misery."

...Yeah, alright. Fine. Not like you're interested in making people around you more miserable than you.

"Thank you." Haruka replies, sipping her own tea with deliberate care, her eyes closed while doing so. You try to do the same, but decide that the risk of having boiled tea accidentally being poured down your front isn't worth it, so you drink like a normal person instead.

...Huh. You're not much of a tea drinker, and the only cake you're in the habit of shoveling into your face is of the pan-fried variety. From what you could tell after a few sips and a bite, however, they're actually pretty good. Did she make them herself, or...?

"Yuma's kind enough to buy the leaves for me from time to time. The cupcakes, well..." Another smile from Haruka, this one a bit more sincere than simply a polite curling of her lips. "It's surprising how much you can do with just a rice cooker, the right ingredients and enough time for trial and error."

Well, that's a thing. You thought rice cookers were just for rice, period.

"That was what I thought, too." Haruka nods. "Did you know you can even make pudding with a rice cooker? I haven't tried it, but apparently you can."

Yeah. That's...that's neat. You probably should get one for your apartment, or something.

"I would certainly recommend it if you don't have one already."

Right. Well. You're happy this is starting out civil, at least. After the incident earlier, you'd have thought it'd be hard to talk to her.

"Ah." Haruka places her teacup down on its feather-thin saucer. "Was I screaming about something in particular? I saw myself screaming when we met, and going possibly mad." It's here that she clears her throat, wincing slightly. "If so, that would explain my sore throat, all of a sudden."

...Yeah. Yeah, she was screaming. Nothing about in particular, just at you. A general kind of screaming.

"I see." The blonde-haired girl seems to giggle slightly, here. "Well, you're here, Miss Murderface. Please, ask me what you want. You're visibly displeased about things being vague, I'll explain things as clearly as I can, as how I saw them. Let me be your prognosticator now, as I've been for the Ninth since my capture.

Haruka smiles, tilting her head slightly to the side, her bright blue eyes staring into yours. "Very well, then, Miss Matsuda. That's...certainly a prettier name than Murderface." She nods, here. "And yes, the identity Prophet. I saw you asking me this question, with your golden gun pointed at my forehead. I also saw myself giving you the wrong answer - or rather, the answer you didn't want, and you killed me in a rage." She closes her eyes. "You asked Yuma to burn my corpse where it lay."

Haruka opens her eyes again. "Evidently, that hasn't happened yet. Or maybe it wasn't fated to happen at all. I just see things, Miss Matsuda. I can't say if they're predictions or not, so I take them all with a grain of salt. Some more than others."

She takes another sip of her tea, and as she places her cup down on its saucer once more, you spot her hands shivering again. This time, she sees you noticing, and Haruka smiles once more, this time a brittle, shaky one.

"I...I apologize. You must understand, I...I've had nightmares about this. The visions I see aren't the most pleasant, especially those that involve you." She giggles here, nervously. "I...sometimes I find myself wishing that you would simply go ahead and do it, you know? To relieve me of the misery of waiting for the other shoe to drop. Or for your hand to pull the trigger, to put it in a more direct way."

...You're not going to kill her, you say, slowly and deliberately, looking her straight in the eyes as you do so. Whatever she saw or keep seeing, it's not going to happen.

"Nothing I would like more than to believe you, Miss Matsuda," Haruka averts her eyes, down at her hands clasped tightly on her lap. "But it will happen. It's with all certainty that it will." Here, she looks up at you. "And I want you to know that I forgive you. You've taken everything from me, and you will take what little I have left. But I will forgive you."

You blink at this, stunned.

"The Prophet is Mikuni Oriko," Haruka says firmly, before you can even frame a reply. "She has Ahriman's golden hequin staff with her. She is the one responsible for these attacks, the decoy corpse, the threats made on Tomoe Mami's life. She seeks redress for Kure Kirika's death, and she wants you to suffer like she has." She ends her words with another shaky sip of tea. "...The second time I've betrayed my Warmaster. It makes even the most delicious tea turn bitter and rancid in your mouth."

How do you react?

No, she knows we will be suspicious.

I think its less that everyone's lesbian, and more that these magical girls are brought together by horrible situations where they make a faustian deal, and then work in tightly-knit groups to fight off impossible horrors.

That sort of shit breeds camaraderie, and more likely than not affection, platonic and otherwise.

They're not lesbians, they're bros. They're the bro-est of bros to each other because their lives depend on it.

The point it, humans are sexual creatures, and if you isolate a gender, you're going to get homosexual behavior. The girls are lesbians because the only available partners are girls. If you had magical boys as well, then I'm sure we'd see more heterosexuality.

Haruka shakes her head, managing to work up a smile even if her face has gone completely pale, all color drained from it. "It's...I know you mean it, Miss Matsuda, and truly, I appreciate it. Maybe...maybe I'll think about it. A last request certainly wouldn't be remiss, in this situation." She giggles again, a bitter, brittle thing, one she tries to drown with another sip of tea.

"The golden staff is sentient." She gestures towards your bracelets. "Those...those things. You've used them, Miss Matsuda, and you know that the souls of their previous users reside in them. Ahriman, even before she turned, even before she had the golden hequin staff - she was already powerful. The staff itself merely focused her abilities, and then amplified it."

A shuddering breath, drawn from pale lips. "It would have been easy for her, once she had transferred her soul into the staff upon her demise, to manipulate events from within. Visions sent to those loyal to her, instructions, commands. Scheming, planning, watching." Haruka looks at you. "Finding someone with enough hatred in her heart for one certain Murderface that she would be open to instruction. To corruption. And as I know you're aware, Miss Matsuda, a Magical Girl contract doesn't even need to come into play, here."

...No. No, it doesn't.

Fuck. Not Mikuni Oriko. You had your suspicions, but...

"She will kill Tomoe Mami if you do not kill her first. Ahriman believes that it's only then that she will have vengeance. As for Mikuni Oriko..." Haruka lifts her shoulders in a helpless shrug. "Whether she is coerced into this or doing this in her will, I cannot say. She is shielded from my sight by the Golden Weapon."

What question do you ask next?

Alright, I have to call it now before we fall off the 10th page! Thread continues tomorrow (or later, since it's already 3 AM here). Sorry for the horribly long delays, trying to get used to the new laptop, hahaha! Thanks for everyone's participation, feedback is great as always!

In any case, I do believe we have some writeups coming up! Questions answered after them!

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 11/04/13(Mon)06:48 No.28101580

"I...I don't know." Haruka shakes her head. "Every vision I've had of the Prophet and those under her command doesn't show me where they could be. It's always in the dark, with the staff giving off a blinding, searing light." She swallows here, wincing as if in pain, and then takes another sip of her tea. "I haven't seen anything that could indicate where they may strike next, either.

Hnh. Well, at least you have a name. Mikuni Oriko. You didn't think she'd take her grudge against you this far, but it just goes to show--

"If you'd like, though..." The blonde-haired girl suddenly speaks up, interrupting your train of thought. "I can conduct a seeing. R-right now. With...with your permission, of course, since I will have to transform in order to do it." Haruka looks up at you, a nervous smile curling her lips. "I will also need certain objects to help me conduct it."

A seeing? You blink at this, but you couldn't help but a bit wary, here. What kind of stuff does she need, then? Some sort of Ouija board, stuff like that?

"Mirrors," Haruka replies. "Just mirrors. Nine of them. Like something you'd see in a clothes shop? The full body size ones?"

Mirrors. Huh. Well, that doesn't sound too much. You could probably have someone bring down a few from the living quarters. If not, someone can run out and buy some.

>>28101580

"I don't guarantee success, but if you'd like me to make the attempt, I can." Haruka places her teacup down on its saucer, and clasps her hands on her lap. "And with you being here, Miss Matsuda, you'd be able to see what I see as well, making the entire process transparent, and to allow you to make your own decision whether I am feeding you lies or the truth."

Mmh. You're not all that hot with the idea, but...well, you're here anyway. And if she tries anything, you've got a Culexus AND the Desert Eagle with you.

What do you do?

[]Allow the seeing to take place.
[]Refuse.

We've got enough for now. Either she's telling the truth and we should go after Oriko, or it's a trap that we shouldn't go for, but instead see if we can't find oriko anyway. (Don't say that, obviously)

Why would she need us to order mirrors if Yuma knows what she needs to do seeings? Wouldn't those be on hand already?

I missed the voting window, but in general I'm oppsed to having Haruka do a seeing in our presence, because we are skirting the line with Pinky as-is. We don't want to do anything that would risk Pinky interference, seeing as how hostile she is to Haruka. Having her do one in the presence of someone else, such as Yuma, while we are far away, is acceptable. Us directly witnessing a seeing is too dangerous, for everyone involved.

You ask Haruka about the seeing. What happens during it? What kind of events should you expect during the seeing, and what kind of shit shouldn't happen? And is it going to be safe? Not just for you or Yuma, but also for her?

"It's...normally, it's safe, Miss Matsuda," Haruka nods. "I've done it numerous times before, and nothing untoward has happened to be in any of those times." She gestures around you. "What we'll be doing is basically using the mirrors as viewing portals to a time period not of our own. I say a time period rather than the future because we could see something that's happening in the past, or in a present much different from ours. But of course, I'll be doing my best to...seek the proper channel, as it is."

Ahh. Will something happen to her during the seeing? Like, speaking in voices, being possessed, stuff like that?

"N-no, no." Haruka shakes her head, although she pales somewhat at this. "At least, I shouldn't be. If...If I do, however, appear to be not who I am to you at the moment, during or after the seeing, please..." She pauses to take a deep breath. "Please have Yuma subdue me. She will know what to do."

Right. Okay. That doesn't sound too bad, and you ARE in a Silent Room, with a Culexus, after all. Still...

You call Yuma in, and the Culexus hurriedly steps into the Silent Room. She seems to have expected the worst, by the way she heaved a sigh of relief when she saw you and Haruka talking. "What is it, Warmaster?"

You ask the Culexus about the seeing. It takes her a few moments to frame a reply.

"It shouldn't be dangerous, I think. We tried it for your mission with Kirishima Ruri, and all we got in the mirrors were pictures of spiders and insects scurrying around. Nothing really of note." She looks towards Haruka. "And yeah, if she gets possessed or anything like that, we can shut her down. Either I do it or the Silent Room does it."

"I realize I have given you no reason to trust me, since you know I am capable of betrayal," Haruka addresses you directly. "But I only wish to serve, to be of use before I die. Maybe then I can meet my older sister in hell with a smile."

"Don't speak like that, Haruka-chan." Yuma's helmet offers a terse bark of vox-corrupted static, making the girl giggle.

Something of note that I just remembered.

Pinky mentioned that being around culexus made it hard for her to chat with us - IIRC it's what made us want to get buddy-buddy with Yuma to begin with.

We're now with a culexus, in a silent room. Double layered AMF means pinky can't do shit, and that's probably why she's upset.

You decide to allow the seeing to take place. From what you've heard, it sounds like a safe thing to do. You're not sure about all that kind of psychic stuff, but since it did allow Haruka to get the identity of the Prophet, well...you'll try anything once. Within reason.

And with that, both Haruka and Yuma begin to prepare her room for the seeing. The bed is pushed to the side, flush against the wall, along with the rest of her things. Clearing the very center of the room, so the energies have one single point to focus on, or something like that. You didn't listen too closely.

The mirrors were indeed brought down from the living quarters, and you had to help Yuma to make sure that each one was positioned just so around the circular tea table also placed on the very center of the room. Each one positioned evenly around and from the table, the reflective sides facing the table's occupants. A third chair was also procured, so that Yuma herself could take part and be able to react as quickly as possible.

Yuma had also insisted that the door to the Silent Room be completely shut for this event. Its antimagic engine will also be deactivated for the duration, to allow Haruka to transform and use her abilities. Despite your misgivings here, Yuma insisted that the controls to start up the Silent Room were built into her suit's system - she only needed to think it and the Silent Room would activate on her command. Should her suit detect her flatlining, it will automatically activate the Silent Room as well.

You make your own preparations as well. The two Golden Weapons in your possession are close at hand, ready to be used in an emergency. You'll also be transforming the moment things start going to shit, so there's that, too.

It's as you help Yuma move the last mirror in place that you hear the faint sound of bells ringing - and you turn to see Haruka turn in place slowly, light forming into solid shapes around her and flickering into reality as pieces of her costume. Her eyes still closed, she clasps her hands in front of her, as if preparing to pray - and a beam of light shines down on her, casting most of her features in shadow. When she opens her eyes, the sounds, light and other sparkles disappear, leaving behind a Magical Girl that's as...well, as pretty as the ones they make anime out of.

"Pretty..." You hear Yuma's vox speakers crackle the word out in painful clarity, and you turn to see the Culexus still frozen there, blatantly and openly staring at Haruka. The seer doesn't seem to notice this, walking briskly towards you, a smile on her face.

"I'm ready, Miss Matsuda. Once you are as well, please make your way towards the table and take a seat. We'll begin momentarily."

Without waiting for your response, Haruka goes and takes a seat on one of the chairs around the table herself. Her hands clasping together once more, her head bowing as her lips move in silent, reverent prayer.

"After you, Warmaster." Yuma gestures towards the table. "...I just hope things go right this time."

What do you do now?

Pinky has been after this girl for two years, she has had to live in a silent room just to keep her at bay.
Homuhomu is Pinky's yandere object of obsession. Who was trying to tell us something before we turned our costume off in order to ignore her.

Now we put these two objects of her interest in one room, turn off the protection, and start using magic to see just how many ways and in how many futures this will fuck us over.

Right, nothing could go wrong

Despite yourself, you couldn't help but give Yuma a little ribbing. First insubordination, now fraternization with the enemy? What's next, contraband? Should you check her room for any material prohibited by Officio Law? You narrow your eyes at her, a searching expression on your face.

"What?! That's...no, don't be stupid, Warmaster!" The Culexus hisses sharply, as if unwilling to disturb Haruka's prayers. "Haruka is not the enemy! She's been here for an entire year, and she's never given me cause to be suspicious. In fact, all she's been doing is helping us. Kyuubey can prove it--"

Whoa, okay, okay. Jesus. She doesn't need to be so fucking defensive.

...Still, she's pretty fun, though, you remark, placing one hand on her spiked shoulderpad. Why didn't you hang out with her more?

"Because you were too busy having fun with the Betrayer, Warmaster." Yuma shrugs off your hand, and makes for the table as well. "Let's just get this done, alright?"

...Yeah. Right. You shake your head at this, before joining the two on the table, stepping between the mirrors. As you settle in your seat, however, it's here that you notice a sudden flash of pink whip by the mirror closest to you. You blink at this, before turning towards your two companions. They're not wearing any pink, that's for sure. Where could it have come from...?

"Alright, let's begin." Haruka opens her eyes and pulls her hands apart - revealing her own Soul Gem, a pure clean white housed in brass gilding. This she sets on the center of the table. "Yuma-san, when I say so, can you turn off the lights?" She looks at you as if to explain, and she does. "The light of my Soul Gem will be enough illumination, and will serve to make the visions on the mirror clearer."

"Sure, that's no problem." Yuma turns to look for the light switch. Finding it, she raises a hand towards it. "When you're ready."

Haruka takes a deep breath, before holding out one of her hands to you. You blink at it, before taking it with your own.

...Soft. Her hands are soft, frail. Warm. You feel like you could crush her fingers just by squeezing hard enough.

"It's only when we're scared the most that we can be brave," Haruka says, looking into your eyes. You blink again at this. You're not really that scared.

"Oh? That's good, Miss Matsuda." The seer smiles. "Because I am."

She turns towards Yuma. "Now." The Culexus flexes her gloved fingers, and the room lights die with a sharp snap, sending the room into total darkness.

"I invoke the Blessed Lady, The First Knight, The Blood Knight and the Shieldmaiden to protect us as we look into the tides of the Empyrean," You hear Haruka say as her Soul Gem starts to glow brighter, providing just enough light to allow you to see the table, its occupants, and the mirrors around you.

"I beseech the First Knight to protect us with her blade of justice and purity. I pray to the Blood Knight to deliver us from evil upon her steed of fire and hate. I implore the Shieldmaiden..."

It's here that she squeezes your hand. "...to carry my prayers to the Blessed Lady when we need her guidance the most."

...

"This lowly servant asks to be given the right to see." Haruka's grip on your hand is tighter now. "This unworthy servant asks to be given the right to the truth. This pitiful servant begs to be given the true sight, to see through the lies, and to reveal what is asked of her."

It's then - faintly, but clearly - that you hear cackling. Not in your ear, but somewhere inside the room. A horribly familiar cackling, one usually followed with the scraping of metal claws and the scent of burned flesh and bone.

You glance at Yuma and Haruka, but they don't seem to be reacting to the sound. If they're hearing it, they're giving no indication.

It's here that you see another pink blur whip past the mirror just next to Yuma.

How do you react?

It's a vote using the anti-spam system 4chan has. Basically you can't post the same thing twice in 5 minutes. So you get a couple choices. For example anti samefagging mechanism.

Basically goes:

>>[post number]
[Choice number here only]

ONLY.

Thing is, it doesn't really work in MGNQ, considering the number of open-ended choices we usually get.

>> ☐ Anonymous 11/04/13(Mon)09:49 No.28102890

I would infer he's referring to the SQ procedure where the QM lays out options like
1 [text]
2 [text]
And then you vote by quoting the post and only including the number you want like

>>####

And you have 5 minutes to vote.
Idea is that you can't make the exact same post within 5 minutes, so samefagging is mostly ruled out.

After player discussion, the QM makes a post numbering the things the players came up with. The only votes counted are the ones that reply to that post with a single number. Voting time is limited to 5 mins.

This makes samefagging harder by taking advantage of the block on duplicate posts.

Things like rolling, punctuation, >, or anything besides the link and # invalidate the vote.

Her praying to the Blessed Lady could just be something that she does to help conceptualize and use her power. You shouldn't automatically assume that just because she invokes the Blessed Lady that it's an actual spell calling upon Faust, since that's not how Meguca magic works.

QB can look into her Contract and tell us what her actual powers are.

I feel like we should have stopped her after the first invocation by ticking off the names.
1. The First Knight
Malal's pretty gone. She's not protecting anyone anymore, except in the most abstract of senses.
2. The Blood Knight
Kharn's way up in Siberia being a housewife, she ain't doing shit down here.
3. The Shieldmaiden
Look, if you want me to protect you from something, it's gonna have to be a concrete threat. I can't protect you from some nether "Empyrean" terrors or whatever.
4. The Blessed Lady
While I can't say she doesn't do any helping, I would hesitate to ask for it at any rate. You're just as likely to get "helped" to a chestful of not-heart as what you asked for.

Too late now, though.

Oh really? Because Lucius called us the Shieldmaiden, and said we worked for the Blessed Lady. We put two and two together pretty fast back there.

TL:DR version:
We are homura, post PPMM, and we may actually still be canon to the after the 3rd movie becauser nothing contradicts this. in this timeline we were dumped into a universe where every type of show may have converged at some point with madoka and the 40k universe being the prominent part, something has made madoka going batfuck insane and witch out, and now she lives in our shield. we have amnesia because witch madoka is an asshole. this has happened a few times for different reasons. in this quest the whole universe basically seems to be slowly collapsing on itself and its essentially our job to fix it when possible, in addition nearly all the warping of reality is due to both us and witch madokami being here.from there a bunch of little things happened like allies and different missions, but thats the basic outlook of the quest.

You grit your teeth in frustration as the cacklings true and clear in the room once more. God dammit, Pinky. Not now. Not here. You're just trying to find the person she warned you about, for fuck's sake.

+ I heard it too. + You hear Yuma's voice ring in your head. + This never happened before. +

You growl at this, shaking your head. Haruka is still focusing, still praying, but she's whispering now, her eyes squeezed shut. It's here that you pulse a thought towards Yuma. + Get ready to shut this entire thing down the moment I say so. +

The Culexus nods here, and holds out a gloved hand towards you. You take it with your one remaining hand, your fingers curling around her gloved, padded own.

"...and we ask this, in your name, the Blessed Lady Who Destroyed Despair And Brought Salvation To Us All." Haruka's voice rises both in strength and volume. "I, Amane Haruke, your ever faithful servant, ask that what we desire be revealed to us!"

The Soul Gem at the very center of the table - Haruka's - begins to grow bright, impossibly bright that it's almost blinding, enough that you have to close your eyes and turn away. Beside you, you hear clicking inside Yuma's helmet - most probably the visor trying to dampen the glare.

...It's bright enough that the light is even penetrating your eyelids, turning the comforting darkness there into a painful white.

You try to call out to Haruka here, to even Yuma - but suddenly you can't hear yourself. As if the light itself had taken a completely different form, filling the entire room not only with illumination but also choking everything else in it. You scream for her again, and this time the Culexus' hand squeezes yours. As if trying to comfort you, somehow.

And then, as suddenly as it started - the light immediately disappears, leaving everything in darkness once more.

"Warmaster?" You hear Yuma's vox-ruined voice call out for you, and you open your eyes to see the Culexus, your face reflecting off her cracked visor. "It's fine now. She did it." Frank relief in her voice. "The seeing's a success."

You turn towards Haruka, and you see the girl still, motionless, frozen in time. Her eyes wide open - but where bright blue eyes should be, there is only the white light glowing from her own Soul Gem. The bauble itself floating off of the table, hovering in front of the frozen girl.

And the mirrors are...well. The mirrors are showing something.

Namely, a silhouette of someone with long black hair, long enough to reach down to the back of her thighs. Her eyes a bright, startling blue, staring at you with something resembling hate. ...No, not hate, but disgust. Loathing.

Before you can react, however, the silhouette disappears - and the mirrors begin to display scenes, connected together with blurry smears.

Mikuni Oriko, having tea all by herself, a black armband around her upper arm. She is visibly trying not to cry, but fails - ending up sobbing into both her hands, her body bent over double in her grief. Her teacup rolls off of the table and drops to the floor, where it shatters into a thousand pieces.

Lucius and her squad, kneeling in front of a confused Oriko with the golden staff in her hands. The swordswoman you fought in the stadium standing up, smiling awkwardly, before placing her hand on her chest, above her heart. Promising to protect Oriko until the day the Blessed Lady takes her.

Possibly the one who's really pulling the strings.

Oriko's a figurehead, Lucius is too hotheaded and lacks planning skills, so logically there's someone else running their little anti-murderface gangbang.

I was going to ask you if you knew her personally, or if Malal here had any sources regarding her." The Incubator's chair swivels around, once more, and a small electronic beep precedes the multiple screens of Kyuubey's rig lighting up in unison to show one particularly-grainy photo of a fair-skinned young woman with long, platinum-blonde hair, blue eyes, and a rather mirthless smirk on her face. She is wearing what appears to be a rather ornate kimono the color of arctic ice, with various tasteful bits of soft amber and yellow here and there. She is grasping what looks to be a large, grand, golden staff of some sort, topped with a snake's head with its fangs bared to strike.

I think theres a good chance that when we time-travel we transpose ourselves over the Homura of the world we enter, which gets wierder/more strained the further we travel from our base timeline. For all we know, Chiaki Matsuda actually is this world's Homu, like how Kanade is this world's Kaname Madoka.

The ramifications of the strain of transposition and getting further from our original timeline would make a lot of sense as to how Homu has gotten fucked up to the point where she is at now, as an added complication to all the craziness with Madoka/Faust.

That's not speculation, it's fact. The original owner haunts the weapon.

Here comes the speculation. Even if the girl who owns it is still the original owner or still alive. The Deagle is haunted by a version of Murderface for example, GoreFather/Child is probably haunted by a version of Kharn when she was warmaster.. This theory essentially explains why golden weapon users either become a whole lot better at what they do, or go batshit insane. Girls who are especially unhinged go more crazy because they are basically being egged on by them self. A crazy person telling a crazy person to do crazy shit.

We can only interact with Yuu from the Gauntlets, Gorefather and Gorechild just feels "playful" in the Blood Knight sense while Murasama is pure "Blood For the Blood God!" murderous intent.

I have no idea with the D Eagle, except that part near the beginning where Chiaki nearly pulled the trigger on Sayaka. So your "Crazy Feedback Loop" idea holds water.

We know for a fact that, once killed, the owner of a golden weapon will find their souls being contained within the weapon itself. Yuu and Kirika are proof of this.

There's no clear indication of what happens if the owners are still alive, though. When Chiaki got amnesia in Siberia and touched the DEagle, she heard herself rambling about a lot of nonsense words. The corruption linked to the weapons probably has something to do with the soul-link, but there may not be a full-on transfer until the owner's death.

The Gauntlets hold Yuu, but Kilgore was using them when we killed him.

We have no evidence to think that anyone other than the original owner haunts the weapons. But only decu knows for sure.

I'm basing my assumptions off of things we have seen happen.

That's what little I remember, but it makes sense. A Golden Weapon whose wielder is still alive is imprinted with the more prominent aspects of that wielder's personality.

Does that mean anyone who wields the D Eagle gets the urge to shoot kneecaps?

Also, did we ever handle Murasama after Kirika bit it? All I remember is Murderface getting "KILLKILLKILLKILLKILLKILLKILL" urges from it.

Haruka doesn't respond to your requests - it doesn't look like she's in any state to chat, anyway - but it looks like she's responding through what you're seeing in the mirrors. Each one panning out and focusing on each of the magical girls seen with Oriko. Showing their weapons, their costumes in full, and what appears to be them sparring in a bright, green open field. Somewhere...somewhere in the mountains, it looks like. An expensive-looking vacation house in the mountains.

It's here that you see one particular Magical Girl sitting away from the main group. She's wearing what looks like a modified version of the Culexus suit - one that's mainly all crimson instead of the usual black. Her helmet is also different - instead of a skull, it's a demon's fanged, grinning face. She's honing a rather brutal-looking combat knife on a whetstone, with slow relaxed strokes - a stark contrast as to how she seems tense, wary almost. Looking around every now and then, as if trying to find something, or someone, watching her.

Suddenly, she stands up, slipping her combat knife into its sheath lashed to her boot and leaving behind the whetstone. She makes to approach Oriko, but she's stopped by one of the many girls crowding around their Prophet. You hear her voice - digitized like Yuma's, but rougher, more masculine. "We're being watched. I can feel it." Her words ending in a snarl, like that of a cornered predator.

You watch as Oriko stands up, regal in her kimono, the staff flying towards her outstretched hand. It's here that she walks forward, still surrounded by her retinue, and talks with the crimson Culexus in soothing tones. You can't hear what they're talking about - either their voices are too faint or muffled to understand - but you suddenly realize the answer when Oriko's smile turns cold as she turns to look at you. Her eyes flashing with pure, unflinching hatred.

What I really want to know is why Ahriman wanted Mami so badly. The first time the members of the 3rd were after Mami, when Kharn went over to see Ahri she demanded Mami (though that was ostensibly a ploy to bathe the officio in MG blood) and now she's after Mami's head.

What's this girl's Mami obsession? (Assuming it's not just Haruka leading us up the garden path)

Staring at you, as if she could see you from the scrying mirror she's being projected onto.

That's...that's not possible, right?

"...No, no, that's impossible." Yuma says this for you, once more sounding like she's reading your mind. "They're not supposed to see us. This isn't a two-way thing, this is--"

The Culexus' words die in her vox-speakers as the both of you watch Ahriman aim the golden hequin staff - and from its tip bursts what appears to be a...a thing made out of pure hate and fire. Shrieking soundlessly from a beaked mouth, it spreads its wings and explodes towards you. Careening towards the mirror with impossible speed, as if trying to build up enough to smash right through and attack.

How do you react?

File: 1383584210801.jpg-(1.8 MB, 2048x1536, spooky parking garage (bu(...).jpg)

A deserted parking garage, three stories below ground. Alex shook her head. Something felt wrong, and she'd told her comrades as much over and over. She took a deep breath of the stale air, shifting her weight onto a different foot as she huddled behind some white sedan. The silence was deafening. Every muscle in her body ached to get up and -do something-. But, she was a professional. She did her job, and she did it with precision and efficiency. Her fingers tightened around the grip of her pistol. They itched for action.

Her earpiece crackled to life, nearly making her jump straight out of cover.

"Any signs of movement, Alex?"

"Negative, Kay," she whispered in response. "Nothing yet."

"Understood. Remain on standby."

Alex glanced at the figure huddled beside her. The other girl was breathing a bit too heavily for comfort, and Alex could feel her shaking through the car. There were seven of them; that one being Maggie, if she remembered right. The newest of the batch. Short orange hair that barely made it past her ears, topped off with a big yellow bow. Her costume had always weirded Alex out. It looked like someone had thrown some short-sleaved officer's jacket over a white one-piece swimsuit and called it a day. Her fighting style was even more half-assed - she just hucked exploding cannon balls at things. Alex couldn't help but admire the simplicity of it.

Then there was Kay - the intrepid leader. Tall, blonde-haired, blue-eyed with a pure white maid outfit. Alex had always been surprised that she hadn't ended up as a Warmaster or even a rank leader somewhere. She used some giant space cannon like none of them had ever seen before. Kay always gave them pills whenever one of them accidentally ended up too close to the beam. Radiation poisoning or something. Apparently even magical girls had to worry about that.

Alex scratched at her messy black hair. The gasmask perched on top of her head kept making her sweat and itch too much. They'd all been given them prior to the mission. Alex figured they looked spooky as hell when they switched the thermal imaging on. Big, glowing red eyes. Anyone with any sense left would shit themselves as the sight of their squad. It was just too bad that Kay said they were after someone even scarier.

She looked over her shoulder, peering at another magical girl brandishing what looked like a raygun from the fifties three rows down. The other girl flashed a toothy grin and a thumbs up, which Alex answered with a smirk and a nod. How she had ended up on point with the new girl was a mystery. Sure, they had a Callidus hiding top-side watching the security cameras, as if that was somehow reassuring. Jiang - some Chinese girl with her hair in those weird buns and a stupid black and yellow jester hat. Alex was ninety percent sure that wasn't even her real name. The rest of them were further into the garage, spread out behind cars and pillars.

"Kay," the radio started up. Jiang. "I- I think I see someone on camera three. She's-" The Callidus paused. "She's got a cane? I think? And she's- she's waving at m-"

A sickeningly crunched sounded from the Callidus' end. Alex could make out the sound of too many bones snapping as something hit her. Hard. Something made a squelching thump - probably the girl's body hitting the ground.

"KAY!" The Callidus screamed. A serious of wet coughs sputtered through, sending static over the radio.

"KAY! THERE'S-" Another series of coughs, along with a different sound in the background. It sounded like something metal slowly being dragged over concrete.

"Oh god, no. OH PLEASE, NO!" The girl pleaded. "KAY, THERE'S A SECOND ONE! I REPEAT TWO TARG-"

The grinding sound ceased for a brief moment, before a high-pitched scream was cut short.

Then silence.

Alex's leg was shaking. In the blink of an eye, their squad was down to six. The mission had barely even started. Jiang was supposed to disappear as soon as she spotted the target, but... Two. No one had said there would be two targets. Just the crazy doctor. A god damn CRIPPLE! The black-haired girl ran that horrid grinding sound through her mind over and over. It was heavy, whatever it was. A hammer maybe? A sledge hammer? That had to be it. But there was no way in hell the crippled doctor could carry something like that.

The whole squad was silent. Not a single peep out of any of them. She needed to hear something, anything.

"Kay?" Alex tried. "Orders?"

I took a moment for the squad leader to respond. "Check your equipment," she said. She sounded shaken - unlike the usual calm and cool Alex had come to know and rely on. "Stay- Stay calm, everyone. There are still six of us and two of them. We can..." Her voice trailed off for a moment before she seemed to remember other people were listening. "We can handle this."

She didn't sound so sure.

So Alex waited. Time seemed to stretch on and on, with only a stray cough here and there breaking the silence. Maggie grew more anxious with every minute. Alex almost worried that her breathing would give away their position. She checked her watch. It was nearing one in the morning. It had been over ten minutes since Jiang went dark without the slightest sign of the target. TargetS, Alex mentally corrected herself.

She couldn't help but imagine what could be taking them. Maybe they'd left? They figured out that it was a trap and got the hell out of Dodge. Seemed reasonable enough. Alex was about to volunteer to go check when something thumped against the car beside her – Maggie.

>> ☐ Prose Magica: A Spoonful of Sugar Part 2 archivalfag 11/04/13(Mon)12:00 No.28104183

The younger girl was breathing even more heavily than usual. She coughed and sputtered before her body went limp, falling over onto the ground. Maggie seized, her hands grasping at her throat as foam began to bubble up from her mouth.

"Shit!" Alex muttered. "MASKS!" She screamed, pulling her own gas mask down. "EVERYONE, MASKS!"

Then she heard it. That awful grinding, speeding up and growing louder.

A delicate tinkling sounded against the ground behind her as a cluster of objects scattered among the cars and rolled to the ground. A series of pops echoed through the garage as dense, pale green smoke billowed outward.

"SMOKE," someone called out.

The grinding sound sped up as it rushed Alex's position, joined by a howling, screaming fury. She managed to flick on the thermal imaging just in time to see an orange blur leap straight over the car she had been using for cover. The target screeched with rage as it charged one of Alex's squadmates. The thermal vision made the girl's head look like little more than a pumpkin as it exploded into dozens of orange flecks that splattered over the cars.

Alex fired until the magazine ran out. It was hard to miss the roaring monstrosity as it made a bloody mess of her squad. Yet, nothing seemed to stop it. The orange mass of heat jumped over another car, bringing down her hammer on another girl in an overhead strike. It missed her head entirely - instead separating her left shoulder from the rest of her body.

Her name was Brooks. It was Brooks, Alex was sure of it. She tried to get up again, despite missing a full quarter of her body. She was rewarded for her tenacity with another savage blow to the sternum, shattering it and everything behind it. The hostile girl slammed her hammer into Brooks' torso again and again until her torso was little more than a pulpy mess of tissue and bone fragments.

Alex's breath caught in her throat as the girl turned to look her straight in the eye.

The creature threw her head back in a high-pitched, manic cackle before disappearing behind a car. Alex took a deep breath and ducked back into cover, taking the opportunity to reload. She was panting. Jiang, Maggie, Brooks... who else? There was a fourth. It was Maxine, wasn't it?

"Kay," Alex whispered. "Kay, are you there?"

After a moment's hesitation, the squad leader responded. "Alex? Is that you?"

"I'm here. Who else is still up?"

"Just us and- and Emily I think-"

"I am sorry to say," a third voice cut in, "zat fraulein Emily is no lonker vis us. You have mein deepest condolences. Vile I am sure zat you all have had a great deal of fun today, I am afraid zat ve vill have to be wrapping zis test up. I sank you for all of ze vunderful data zat you have provided for me tonight."

Alex's head snapped up as she heard a bang echo through the garage. She could hear the grinding again - distant and growing quieter. Holding her breath, she peered over the hood of the car and disengaged the thermal vision on her mask.

Nothing.

There was no sign of movement in every direction. Only neat rows of blood-splattered vehicles and concrete pillars.

She slid back down, holding her knees close to her chest. Her eyes wandered to Maggie's motionless form lying beside her. Every now and again the girl's body would spasm as a bubble rose from her throat. She didn't sign up for this. She didn't sign up for any of it.

They were supposed to be hunting a cripple! A Venenum, even! Hardly any combat capabilities! It should have been like fish in a barrel for a squad of six Vindicares and a Callidus. Now there were two left - soon to be one if the other girl was going after Kay.

Alex rocked back and forth, hugging her knees as tears welled up in her eyes. She had to make up her mind. Cut her losses and run or stay and risk being turned into a human piñata. Kay was still somewhere in the parking garage. Probably. Assuming that thing with the sledge hammer hadn't already found her. Whatever it was, nobody could call it human any more.

The black-haired girl slipped a hand into her pocket and pulled out a quarter. Heads - she'd play the hero and go after Kay. Tails - she'd run. She flicked it up and watched it tumble in the air. It barely left her hand when she heard the scream. By the time it hit the ground, Alex was already on her feet.

She sprinted out of that garage like a bat out of hell. It was a primal, instinct-driven flight born from man's earliest days being chased by predators. Up and up she went, clearing each floor in a matter of seconds. She had to survive, she told herself. The sound of heavy, ragged breaths reached her ears. She couldn't tell if something was chasing her or if they were her own. Either way, it didn't matter. She smiled as she caught sight of the entrance barricades, giving her a final burst of speed.

Then something pricked her hip.

Her legs seemed to simply cease functioning as she tumbled into the rear bumper of a van while her gun skidded underneath it. The mask was torn off of her crying face while her elbows and knees scraped along the ground. Alex groaned, forcing herself into a sitting position. Her eyes widened as she yanked a dart out of her side. Her legs refused to work, not budging an inch as she tried to get herself up. She was paralysed.

It was then that she heard it. It wasn't the grinding of metal, nor the banshee screaming of the girl who had massacred her squad. Only a rhythmic thumping with a couple of seconds between each one.

[6/13]

>> ☐ Prose Magica: A Spoonful of Sugar Part 2 archivalfag 11/04/13(Mon)12:03 No.28104233

Alex panicked, grasping at the van desperately trying to pull herself upright. She had barely gotten onto her knees when something hard and thin collided with her side, throwing her onto her back.

"I vould ASK," came a voice, "zat ze test subjects NOT LEAVE ZE TESTINK AREA."

Doctor Emma Strauss stepped up beside the fallen girl, then placed dug a knee into Alex's gut, putting her weight on her cane. She observed the test subject from behind her circular glasses for a few moments, grinning through wickedly pointed teeth. The doctor adjusted her top hat as she leaned in closer to her captive.

"Vhat is your name, fraulein?" She asked. It sounded so sincere, so innocent.

The other girl was breathing heavily, panic-stricken and sobbing. Strauss couldn't even tell if her words were reaching the wretch.

"VHAT IS YOUR NAME?" She yelled, seizing the girl by the throat.

"A-A-A," the girl swallowed hard, forcing back her tears, "Alex. A-Alex Madison."

"Alex?" The doctor suddenly shifted back to her more friendly demeanour as she relinquished her grip. "Zat is short for Alexandra, ja?"

Alex nodded quickly.

"Such a pretty name," Strauss remarked. "Und who are you vorkink for, Alex?"

"N-n-n-no one," Alex stammered, trying to speak between her sobbing. "We-we're b-b-bou-bounty hu-hunters."

The doctor chuckled to herself. "I sink zat vas a very poor life decision, hm? Goink after ze Sirteents' bounty, ja?"

The girl nodded.

"Und how much is DOCTOR EMMA STRAUSS wors zese days?" The doctor asked, adding emphasis to her full name. "No less zan-"

"Te-ten thousand e-each," Alex answered, "and e-enough grief seeds to r-re-retire."

"Ten sousand?" Strauss repeated the number incredulously. "TEN SOUSAND?! I am INSULTED! Zose dummkopfs could barely tell hydrogen cyanide from hydrogen peroxide visout me!"

The doctor clicked her tongue as she reached into her cape and produced a battered old clipboard. Alex watched as she spent a minute filling in details with a pen attached with a string. After a moment, Strauss turned to her captive once more.

"Now," Strauss started, tapping the pen on the clipboard, "on a scale of vun to ten, how afraid vould you say you are? Vun beink how you feel playink vis a little puppy or kätzchen, ten beink permanently catatonic."

"I- I don't-"

"HOW AFRAID ARE YOU?!"

The doctor made a muffled grunt of acknowledgement as she tried to stifle her laughter. "Good, good. You are beink very brave, Fraulein Madison. Ve must all make sacrifices for ze furzering of science."

After another few moments of notes, the horrid sound of metal grinding against concrete picked up again. It was far slower this time, growing louder and closer. For the first time, Alex got clear view of the beast of a magical girl that had decimated her squad.

She was short - no more than five feet tall at most. Her hair was long, straight and coloured a dark green. It seemed as thought she was wearing nothing more than what was once a white sundress, now soaked with blood and perforated with more than a dozen bullet holes. Alex could smell the sheer volume of blood even from where she was lying. The girl's face was obscured by a gasmask of the exact same make as Alex's own, and what she had thought was a sledge hammer turned out to be little more than a pipe welded to a thick, solid wedge of steel. Fresh blood seemed to constantly trickle down from her hands - one of them clutched tightly around the back of Kay's collar, dragging her limp body along the ground.

"Kay!" Alex screamed.

"Ah! Milica!" Strauss clapped, pulling herself up. "Just in time! And vun captive unconscious, as ordered! Toll!"

[8/13]

The doctor crouched down in front of the unconscious squad leader, lifting the blonde's chin to inspect her. She carried on for some time, checking the body for injury, before finally standing back up and giving Milica a pat on the shoulder.

"Very gut, very gut!" She exclaimed, marking several things down on her clipboard. "Vun unharmed, vun unconscious... Somevhat beaten up, but in perfect condition. "To be expected, I suppose," Strauss muttered, jotting it down. "Did you remember to brink me vhat I asked for, Milica?"

"O-oh y-yeah!" The blood-soaked magical girl promptly dropped both her weapon and the squad leader's body before pulling out a handful of soulgems. "I a-almost f-f-forgot!"

"Oooh, you are just a darlink!" The doctor squealed, taking the gems for herself. "I could not ask for a better subject! Ve vill go far, you und I! Now take off zat mask, you look silly."

"I th-thought it made me lo-look s-scary..."

"Oh ja, so s-s-spooky vis your speech impediment," Strauss muttered. "Let's see... eins, zwei, drei, vier, fünf! Perfect! All accounted for! "I- I thi-think I- I w-want-," she stammered, her head jerking and rolling around on her shoulders, "I w-w-want t-to SMASH 'EM UP!"

"Now do you remember vich is vich, Milica?" Strauss asked in an almost motherly tone.

The girl pulled the gasmask from her face, stared down at the assortment of gems, and blinked. Her brow crinkled as she thought, finally mumbling a muted, "N-no..."

Strauss sighed and touched her fingertips to her forehead. "Milica, Milica, Milica... Vhat vill I ever do vis you?"

"I-I'm s-s-suh-sorry, Doctor..."

Strauss let out a long, deep breath before laughing and tousseling the girl's hair. "Oh vhat ze hell! I can't stay mad at you vis results like zis! Go on, have fun. I need to go speak vis Fraulein Jiang."

"Th-thanks, D-Doc!"

As the doctor slowly hobbled off, Milica crouched down to look straight into Alex's tear-filled eyes. As she did, she wiped a few messy strands of hair out of her vision, smearing her face red with fresh blood.

"L-le-let's ha-have some FUN."

The heavy steel door of the security room slammed shut behind Strauss as she stepped in. In the middle of the room, a girl with a black and yellow jester hat idly spun about in a swivel chair, humming some tune to herself. A sledge hammer and a dead, badly beaten security guard rested on the ground off to one side of the room. The Callidus hopped off of her seat and walked toward the doctor, dizzy and wobbling.

"Welcome back, Doctor," Jiang greeted. "I trust everything went well?"

"Stupendously so!" Strauss replied, clasping her hands together excitedly. "I do not sink I have ever had a first field test go so vell! Of course, zere are still some minor adjustments to be made, but zat is to be expected."

"Then our work today is concluded?"

"It pains me to say zat it is," the doctor said with no small amount of sorrow in her voice. "It vas a pleasure vorking vis you, Fraulein Jiang. I vill send a full report to your Officio in ze mornink, alonk vis payment for your services, of course."

"The pleasure was all mine, doctor," the Callidus responded, bowing her head. "Our incubator wishes me to pass on that he is looking forward to our future business arrangements."

"Of course!" Strauss laughed. "Und tell your varmaster-"

"Spymaster, doctor."

"Ja..." Strauss narrowed her eyes and peered at the Callidus over her glasses. "Spymaster... In any case, ze offer for tea is alvays open."

"I will pass on the message, but you must understand," Jiang shifted uncomfortably under the doctor's gaze, "she is rather... picky about the company she keeps."

"As alvays," Strauss muttered, sighing. "Zat kinder needs to lighten up, I sink."

"Most people would say the exact opposite," the Chinese girl giggled.

As if on cue, there came a light knock at the door. A moment later, Milica's head poked through the opening before she slowly stepped into the room, still dragging her maul along the ground. The girl clutched at her stomach with a bloody hand as she stumbled in, groaning faintly.

"H-Hey, D-D-Doc," Milica mumbled, trying to hold her lips together between words, as though she were about to be sick. "A-a-and Miss J-Ji-Jiang."

Strauss blinked and tilted her head. "Vhat's wronk?"

"I- I, u-um," the bloody girl stammered, nearly whispering, "I a-ate one..."

The doctor let out and exasperated sigh as she began to rummage around under her cape. "Vhat have we talked about?" She asked, in the same parental voice that she seemed to reserve for Milica alone.

"D-d-don't e-eat so-souls..."

"Und vhat did you do?"

"I tho-thought it wo-wo-would look s-scary..."

Strauss shook her head and pulled out a vial of clear liquid. "Next time, sink about how scary you vill look srowing up in ze garbage can, hm?"

Milica nodded glumly and took the vial, then sauntered over to the trash bin in the corner of the room. Strauss couldn't help but smile at the bloodied girl. She didn't seem stupid, just a bit on the slow side. The doctor winced slightly as she began to feel something resembling maternal feelings toward Milica.

"Kids," she muttered, chuckling softly.

Jiang glanced around the room before stepping over to the numerous monitors that lined one of the walls. Alex was huddled over the broken body of her late squad leader, sobbing. Her body was visibly shaking even from the security camera's blurry video feed. The Callidus sighed and shook her head.

"They were good girls," she remarked, "if not the brightest. A bit too desperate to get out of the magical girl game, if you ask me."

"As ze stupid often are," Strauss added.

Jiang nodded, then stretched out her hand toward the doctor. "I suppose this is as good a time as any for us to part ways, Doctor. It has been a pleasure."

"Likevise," the doctor replied, shaking the Callidus' hand. "I hope zat ve vill be able to vork togezer again some time-"

The loud crack of a gunshot echoed through the building. Jiang's gaze snapped back to the video feed, where Alex's body lay still beside Kay's. Strauss remained nonplussed, only flashing one final, toothy grin.

"Good help is so hard to find zese days."

Lanehen, a small town in the French Ardennes
22:00, 10th of May, 1940

It was already dark. Claire and her mother absentmindedly took stock for the third time that night, always throwing furtive glances outside. That afternoon, the town's radio had buzzed to life, and a disembodied voice, fuzzy and emotionless, had reported the latest news. Germany had seized Luxembourg and was massing along the French and Belgian borders.

A bell clinked softly as the door opened. Claire brushed her orange-red hair out of her eyes as she looked up from the drab clothes she was folding. Her father started muttering as he shambled, exhausted, toward the back room. “They just want to wait and see. Don't think an army will bother occupying an isolated farming village. Even though we're so close to the Belgian border.” The resigned tone in his voice grew harder. “Sure, they were fine in the last war, but who can say it will be the same? None of them know what those Germans are like.” Her father had spent his childhood in southern Belgium during the Great War, and most of his family had ended up in forced labor.

“The only protests were me and that damned girl from the new boarding house. Calling me a coward... she has no business even being here.” It would normally be an odd thing to say, but everyone in town agreed that the boarding house was the height of peculiarity. One day a group of young women had arrived and purchased a run-down complex on the edge of the forest, announcing it as a “home for destitute and abandoned girls”. It was a puzzling business model in a town with no such girls, and nobody quite believed it was the whole story.

I was surprised by the amount of Decu posts there already were when I got home from work. Pleasantly surprised I should add.

Thanks for running!

Yet stranger was their demeanor. It was expected for such women to be quiet and tragic. But the girls Claire had encountered weren't just that- they seemed driven, and had an almost military air. And her father said that the girl at the meeting, she thought her name was Aveline, had proposed using Lanehen's remoteness as a strategic advantage, and harassing the invading army. What kind of orphan matron advocates guerilla warfare?

But in the end, both Aveline's rash suggestion and her father's paranoia had fallen on deaf ears. Saying something about being ready to flee town with only the clothes on their backs, her father started to drink, and Claire set off upstairs to bed.

Thoughts swirled around her head as she tried to sleep. She loved her family and the town, and didn't want them to get caught up in the war. But part of her longed for excitement. Excitement was so rare for the daughter of a tailor in the middle of nowhere, and her 16 years of life had been sorely lacking in drama and adventure. The town didn't even have any interesting boys her age, just some boring farmers and a smelly stable-boy. Eventually her mind wandered back to the war. In a way, she thought that Aveline girl was right- her father was acting like a coward. How could he think about abandoning the town to save themselves?

At some point she must have drifted off to sleep, because her mother was violently shaking her awake, clearly panicked. “Th-The Germans are here already! They're rounding up all the girls in town!” Her mother dashed to the dresser and grabbed a wad of clothes, and started fumbling trying to dress Claire as she stood up. She grabbed the clothes and pushed her mother away, who gave her a last panicked glance before dashing out of the room.

There was screaming outside. Walking with trepidation over to the window. The dim moonlight illuminated the street. A soldier carried the screaming 11-year old neighbor girl over his shoulder, as two more threatened her parents with rifles. All three soldiers had large three-pronged spears strapped to their backs. Tridents? Why would they be using tridents?

Some feet away from them was a man in a long black coat, an officer. He was gripping the collar of the mayor, and holding a pistol in his face. His extended arm had two armbands: she recognized the top one with a swastika, but couldn't make out the other. As she started to pull herself away from the window, the mayor slowly raised his arm and pointed at her house.

The officer's eyes followed. He saw her, standing in the window. For a brief second, his pale blue eyes were locked with her own. He barked an order, and Claire ripped away from the window.

As she reached the first floor, the front door was kicked in. The bell made a harsh sound as it hit the floor. As everyone started yelling, Claire ran to the back room. She heard the beginning of a struggle as she undid the back door's bolt and escaped.

When she was barely ten feet away, a gunshot rang out. She stopped mid-stride. A heartbeat later, the yelling and shrieking started again, and Claire raced away even faster than before. The second gunshot made her blood run cold, but she didn't stop running.

She must have ran in a circle, as some time later she was back near the town proper. Near the main square. Panting heavily, she slumped down to the ground, resting against a tree behind the town hall. If only they had known what would happen, mere hours after their meeting. Why were the Germans already here?

It was somehow quieter here. There were the occasional shouts, in both French and German, and the high-pitched crying of a young child in the distance. But the only thing she heard was the steady, constant drone of the crickets.

“Are you alright, Claire Roux?” She jolted back into focus as the words appeared in her head. Somehow, she knew to look up to the branches of the tall oak tree. There was a cat. No, not a cat. A small, four-legged creature, solid white with indistinct features and large red eyes. It wore a red scarf that waved in the wind. Funny, there was no wind tonight.

As it jumped down to the ground in front of her, its scarf shimmered, but the cloth's movements looked as though the creature was standing still in the wind, and not falling down. Light didn't seem to work with the creature properly; it was well-lit despite the darkness.

“There is much you should know, but neither of us has time. I apologize for what I am about to do to your mind.” Information started to flood into her head as the creature, the incubator, kept speaking.

“Your parents are both dead. When the Thirteenth's forces here have captured all of the magical girls, they will cover this up by silencing the entire town.” She started crying for her parents, and for everyone else. She saw what the incubator had seen, and knew he spoke the truth. She knew what he was about to offer her and what it would mean. She herself also knew that she would accept it.

“I can grant you a single wish.” He spoke as a formality. “I offer you wealth, power, fame, and revenge. In return, you will fight as a magical girl. Will you accept the contract, Claire Roux?”

She already had what she had wished for. She could flee alone, as her grandmother had fled Belgium with her father. Or she could take this chance that fate had given her and fight. Tears still rolling down her face, she steeled herself and nodded.

“With what wish will your soul gem shine brightly?” The incubator tensed, and its large ears grew larger still and extended toward her. The scarf was silently flapping as though it was in a hurricane.

She spoke her wish. It wasn't very ambitious, but she was certain she could never regret it.

The world stood still. The crickets stopped their calling as if out of respect for the scene before them. A blinding light shone out of her as the incubator's arms lunged forward into her chest and reverently extracted her crimson soul gem.

Her dress and muddy smock glittered with red lights as they vanished out of existence, replaced by a dark red dress shirt that ended with white frills, covering a pair of skin-tight red shorts. Small ruby epaulets with silver frames and white silk tassels settled on her shoulders. A slender scabbard appeared on a strap at her waist, and an elegant rapier within it. Her soul gem floated to her collar and became a broach. As the shimmering finally died down, a silver chain extended from her right epaulet and hooked itself into the broach.

As the transformation completed, she looked down at her new outfit. It was alien to her, but felt natural, like a second skin. She had been born again, as something beyond normal understanding, beyond humanity. A normal girl would stumble away as her parents died protecting her. A magical girl could push back.

The lights must have been noticed; Claire heard yelling and the rustling of boots moving through tall grass. As she made to draw her sword, the incubator spoke again. “I suggest you fall back and find companions. You have potential, but this battle can no longer be won. Mireille should have just returned, she should be around here somewhere.”

As four German soldiers stepped into the clearing, the incubator stepped into the shadows and disappeared. “I hope we meet again.” resonated in her head, before it was gone.

As the soldiers drew closer, she got a better look at them. They, too, had tridents on their backs. One of them had the same armband she had seen on the imposing officer. It was a white band, with a goldenrod emblem. A spear, in front of the numerals XIII.

One of them stepped forward and spoke. A young man, clearly nervous. “Surrender und you vill not be hurt!” he spoke in a terrible accent. He must have practiced that phrase. Giving him a withering stare, she lunged forward at a superhuman speed, drawing her rapier and impaling his throat in one swift motion. As he and the other soldiers realized what had happened, she jumped back. The young soldier crumpled to the ground, blood pouring from his throat in regular, powerful spurts. The three remaining, their rifles already aimed at her, opened fire. Claire jolted backwards as a bullet hit her shoulder.

It was like a bee sting. The force was great, but she could stand her ground. The blood dyed the white tassels on her shoulder, but it was barely visible on her red costume. It was clearly designed to be soaked in blood. She felt the shot pushing out of her shoulder, the wound closing behind it. She grinned, drunk on her new power, as the bullet fell out of her shoulder and to the dirt.

The soldiers threw their rifles away, and backed away, grabbing the tridents on their backs. “Eversor, Eversor!” one of them yelled toward the town square. Calling reinforcements? They could do nothing to hurt her. She watched her prey warily as they kept their distance, almost shoulder-to-shoulder, their tridents pointing toward her. She jumped forward again, aiming for the right-most. This time, they anticipated her speed, and her target stepped back defensively. She grazed his arm, but knew it was a minor wound. The left soldier stepped forward and prodded her, forcing her back.

A larger group of soldiers arrived from the other side of the building. She counted six, and then noticed the black-coated officer stride up behind them. He was studying her. A few tense seconds passed, before he calmly uttered something in German. His voice was quiet, but carried through the yard.

Nine soldiers moved as one, and moved to surround her. She moved to evade the encirclement, but found herself again against the oak tree.

They started moving in on her, tridents forward. Out of the corner of her eye, she saw the officer walking away. No matter how many soldiers they brought, she could heal anything they could do to her.

She went on a third offensive. A graying middle-aged soldier fell to the ground, dropping his weapon. The rest exploited her over-extension. The first trident skewered her stomach from behind. So did the second. She fell and was pinned to the ground. As she pushed herself back up, two more pierced her arms. She couldn't move her arms- they had severed the tendons! With horror, she realized their goal. They might not be able to kill, but they could easily immobilize.

Pinned to the ground, she suddenly shivered. She had a very bad feeling. Something had become aware of her, and was moving closer. Thinking about it gave her a small headache.

She didn't have time to think about it for long. Her legs kicked out, and she heard a grunt behind her as she bruised someone's shins. One of the soldiers chuckled at her resistance. Bastard.

The chuckling abruptly stopped, and she heard a thump. Followed by two more, in quick succession. Turning her head, she saw three soldiers slump down. Large arrows were poking through their chests. The remaining five soldiers backed away quickly, looking for the new assailant, and leaving Claire free to regenerate. They didn't have to look long. Almost noiseless, a figure descended from the oak tree. It was a girl, perhaps two years older than her. She wore a leather tunic, baggy shorts, and a small forest green cape. Unlike the incubator's scarf, it fluttered properly as it fell, as did her braids of silver hair.

She carried a longbow, and a quiver was belted to her waist. Her drawn bow threatened each of the soldiers in turn, and they slowly backed behind the corner of the building, out of her line of fire. She turned to face the rapidly healing Eversor. As she offered her hand, Claire recognized her as one of the girls from the boarding house, though she hadn't seen her since they first arrived.

Before she could ask anything, the girl smiled. “Next time you're surrounded, just jump over them, alright?” she quipped as she pulled a confused Claire to her feet. “All healthy now? Follow me.” She started running toward the town hall, jumped to a second floor balcony, and then pushed off, landing on the roof. Claire did the same, once again surprised by her own power.

She remembered the presence she felt earlier, and realized her headache was getting worse. It was coming closer.

The archer girl dashed gracefully from one rooftop to another, and Claire managed to keep pace by shadowing her footsteps. As they circled around the plaza, they stopped and silently looked out over the town. A farm was burning in the distance. The supposed purge of evidence must have begun.
